MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Alyssum and Lobelia.

There are a few common plants that enter into our business that are liable to be overlooked at this busy time. Many of our soft-wooded plants you can propagate from cuttings taken outdoors in the fall, but not all. The sweet alyssum is one. Take a few cuttings now. A few hundred will be useful struck now and kept in 2-inch pots until August or September and then planted along the edge of a carnation bench will give you flowers through the winter and all the cuttings you want for spring use. We are often short of good lobelia cuttings in the winter; plant out a dozen and in September cut them back and lift before frost.

Aloysia, Lantana and Heliotrope.

There are a few of our bedding plants that it is almost impossible to root in the fall from cuttings taken from outdoor plants. Among them are the fragrant lemon verbena, lantana and heliotrope. If you happen to have an old plant of the latter trained up the gable end of a house you don't want to bother with any plants, because with a cutting back in September, as you would a grape vine, it will give you flowers and cuttings the entire winter, yet if you don't happen to have such, then pot up a few into 5 or 6-inch pots, lantanas and lemon verbenas also, and plunge outdoors. Brought in before frost and shortened back, the heliotrope will make cuttings that root like chickweed and the lemon verbena and lantana, after partial rest till January and then cut back and started into growth, will also give you the right kind of cuttings.

Summering the Azaleas.

Azaleas that were not sold this spring make our best plants for next Easter. If they were in bad shape and the foliage damaged, then it is to be hoped you cut them back hard, even if you left them leafless. And you may have some that came largely blind and yet made a fine growth. These latter need only the strongest growth pinched back. There is no hurry for a week or two, or till the young growth on the cut back plants is somewhat matured, but they should go outdoors before the middle of June. Whether you plant them out or keep them in pots plunged in frames, they should be in the broad sun every hour it shines; putting them beneath the shade of trees is a great mistake. The Belgians, who produce such marvelously fine plants at what seems to us a very inexpensive price, plant them out in beds of richly prepared soil and even the plants not sold they plant on benches in houses for the winter and replant again in the beds the following summer.

Now, if you have a light, sandy loam with the addition of leaf-mold and plenty of very rotten manure (thoroughly rotten refuse hops is also excellent) you will have an ideal bed to plant out the azaleas. As to lifting in the fall, you know how they are lifted in Europe, cross the Atlantic and smile at you when the case is opened. Don't make the mistake of planting them in the beds too thickly. These plants will increase a third and maybe fifty per cent in size during the summer and it is bad to have them crowded. Daylight should be around every plant. I have seen them planted out in this country with great success.

If you are not blessed with any such conditions of soil, then these azaleas will do finely kept in pots and plunged to the rim of the pot in frames. Faithful watering and a daily syringing in hot weather is the principal care. Very little if any pinching is needed in the summer, except perhaps a strong growth occasionally. Good, strong liquid manure once a week will be of the greatest benefit to those kept in pots.

To digress a moment. We had a call last week from Alfred Dimmock, that cosmopolitan gentleman who represents the orchid king, Sander of England and Bruges, Belgium. His photographs of their azalea beds in Belgium, and they are only one of many acres, looked as neat and orderly as a model Italian flower garden. If he told you the ingredients of the compost you would think as I did that an Egyptian mummy would sprout a new crop of hair under such nourishment.

Metrosideros and Acacia.

Metrosideros (the bottle brush) and Acacia armata that were shortened back after Easter want just such treatment as the azaleas in pots, except that if you gave the azaleas a good soil when received last fall there will be no need of any shift, but the acacia and bottle brush are free-rooting plants, particularly the former, and if well rooted give them a larger pot.

Planting Out Asters.

Some early asters are doubtless planted by many, but there are many more yet to be planted. The aster wants a deep, rich soil and if a long dry spell occurs near their flowering time, say August, they are ruined, so have them within reach of the hose. I think as good a lot of asters as I ever saw were grown in a heavy clay loam dug deeply and thoroughly worked and then well supplied with water. If asters do well they want plenty of room. The early varieties may do in rows one foot apart and nine or ten inches in the row, but Semple's and Vick's Branching and Truffaut's need fifteen by eighteen inches. Plant four or five rows and then miss a row for a path. You will find both for handling the hose and picking the flowers it is no loss of space.

Last year we were badly troubled with the aster beetle, which delights to get down in the center of the flower. We sprayed them with a solution of Paris green, a teaspoonful of the poison in a pail of about three gallons of water, but were too late. The solution did not reach the heart of the flower, where the beetles "do mostly congregate." Before the buds are in the least expanded would be a better time to apply it. If any one knows a better remedy to destroy these lively little devils let's hear from him.

The Improved Form of Nephrolepis Piersoni.

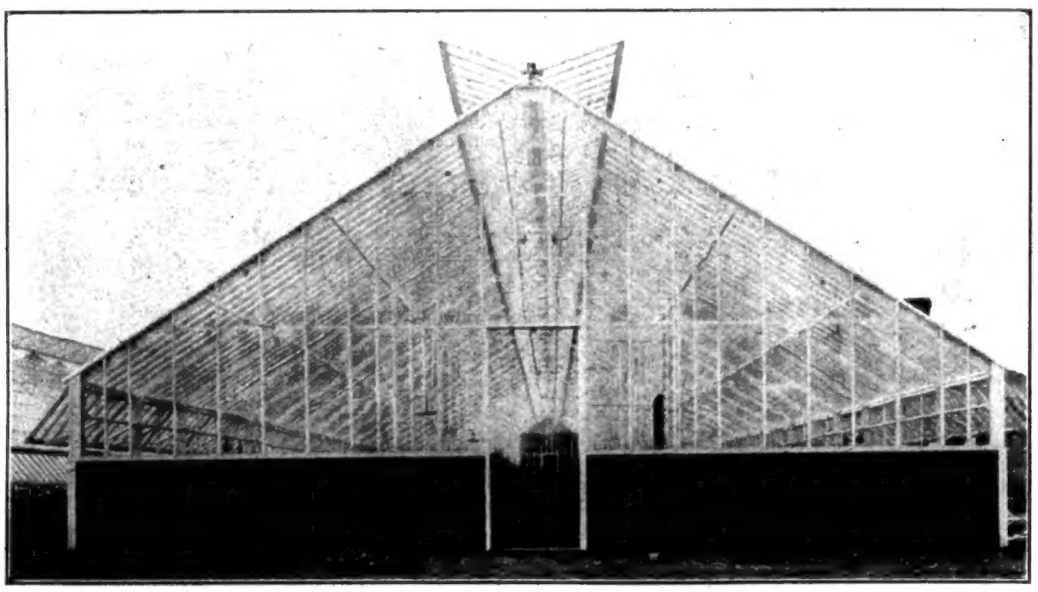
The Boston Fern.

Some one has remarked very recently that the Boston fern is the most popular decorative and house plant of the day and it is about true. All of us grow more or less, but you don't often see a really fine, perfect lot. As soon as the frost kills our plants in the garden, then the plant lover wants something green in the window or drawing-room and now is the time to prepare for this demand. Many plant Bostons out on benches from 2½ or 3-inch pots in five or six inches of rich soil. If given room they grow rapidly and make nice plants for 6-inch pots by September or October. Then they should be lifted and given at least a month in the pots before they are sold.

I think, however, the best and most finished plants are grown altogether in pots. Plunge the pots on the benches during summer and you will save watering and greatly benefit the plants. If you start now with a little plant from a 2½-inch pot shifted into a 4-inch and in August given a 6-inch, you should have a fine plant in October. That is the size that is in most demand, although 8 and 9-inch plants are often asked for, which are easily produced by starting with a larger plant or putting three small plants now into a 6-inch pot. They are too often given too much shade in our hottest weather; then again, they are too often crowded. A nephrolepis with only stiff, upright growth is not handsome. It does not show its graceful, drooping form, and, of course, it is form that is the chief beauty of all ferns.



Old Boston holds its own and it will be a long time, "methinks," ere it is displaced. Anna Foster is fine, a good grower, but has reverted to the old type in many fronds, yet that does not hinder its being a beautiful plant. Piersoni is, as we all know, the most beautiful of all the varieties; as was said once before, it is the Farleyense among the nephrolepis. The new aspirant to favor, Scottii, I have only seen as a specimen plant at Madison Square Garden in November, 1902. That plant was truly a beauty and endowed with the graceful drooping habit to perfection. If there is anything in a name this beautiful fern ought to be in great demand. The Scots and Picts flourished about 200 years B. C. The Picts got picked off, but Scottii still lives in Brooklyn and several other places.

My experience is that a loose, light soil is not the thing to grow good plants of these robust ferns. A soil of the texture and richness that would do for your rose benches will grow them well. I do know, however, that decayed hops they delight in, yet let the soil be firm and compact and don't give them a dar gloomy house.

More Cemetery Notes.

I finished off my cemetery notes last week without saying all I intended to. As pretty and graceful a vase as any is one filled with nothing but Boston ferns, either half a dozen good plants or a specimen with a spread of four or five feet. If watered faithfully they will grow and flourish in the full sun. We also occasionally put in one palm alone, but there is very little choice in the palms, and Phœnix dactylifera and P. canariensis are the ones, because they don't burn even if slightly neglected for water, and they are the right form.

While on the cemetery subject, I notice Mr. Craig, of Boston, in his most interesting notes on winter-killed plants and shrubs, mentions the English ivy as being killed even when protected. It is of no use with us, but there is a little plant that endures our hardest winters and I can see that for cemetery use it is coming to the front more and more every year, and that is Vinca minor, which many of our people who ought to know better call myrtle. It is going to be more and more in demand. It is too cheap a thing to grow in pots or frames. Some place beneath the trees, or any piece of ground if planted with it, just a spray with a root planted a few inches apart, will in two years be a mat and you can sell it by the yard as you buy sod.

The Smilax.

After you get over your bedding plant rush you will have time to attend to future crops. Among them is the smilax bed. Plant every June; about the middle of the month is a good time. Smilax needs no drainage of any kind. Put seven or eight inches of heavy loam, well enriched with manure, on the solid ground and you can, if you keep a temperature of not less than 60 degrees all night, cut four crops before the twelve months are around. Smilax is by no means displaced by the beautiful asparagus. It may pay you to buy it of a specialist when you have occasion to use fifty or 100 strings, but it is a great comfort to have some on your own place when you need it. Smilax grown in a cool house does not pay.

Bouvardias.

When there is no more fear of the slightest frost you should plant out your young bouvardias. They like a light, sandy loam, well enriched, and should be watered freely when rain is absent. Soon after planting they will begin to throw up strong shoots from the ground and when they are five or six inches high they should be stopped. These growths are what make the plant. The little, spindly plant that started from the cutting bed will never amount to anything and when there is plenty of new growth from the bottom the original plant can be cut away. Why the soil should be light is because the bouvardia is not the easiest plant to lift and unless you can get all the roots and fibres when lifting they will wilt badly with the best of care.

Geranium John Doyle.

I have only just recently made the acquaintance of that splendid zonale geranium, John Doyle. It is a grand scarlet. Perhaps it is old, yet we did not know it. If you don't have it, buy a hundred and plant it out. It is brighter than Nutt and as healthy as J. Austin Shaw.

ROSES.

Supports for the Plants.

Since my first notes on rose growing appeared in the Review some years ago I have had many suggestions from growers of merit as to the best system of erecting rose supports. Some are recommended as labor savers; others claim merit as being economical as regards material, etc. The principal object to be kept in view should, in my estimation, be utility; in other words, the method which, while being easiest of erection possesses permanency, makes least trouble to remove and replace, requires little repair and, while possessing efficiency, has also a neat appearance.

When visiting growing establishments I am always on the lookout for some newer and better feature in rose supports, as even the best methods seem to have some weak points in the system, and along with other growers I shall gladly welcome the system which will simplify this work.

In large establishments the most common method is to erect at each end of the bench a form or frame made of 1¼-inch iron piping. This frame consists of two legs with a cross bar which for neatness and strength should be joined at the corners by elbows. The legs should be of such a length that they can be sunk a foot into the ground, leaving the cross bar twenty-eight inches above the surface of the bench. The whole frame should be at least six inches narrower than the bench, so that it can rest against the ends, thus giving support when the wires are stretched.

A line of wire should then be stretched Greenhouses and Carnation Field of Strafford Flower Farm, Strafford, Pa.

over each line of plants, running lengthwise of the bench. No. 16 galvanized wire is strong enough for this purpose, as the wires do not require to be stretched very tight.

At each plant a wire stake of No. 6 or No. 8 galvanized wire should be placed. This stake should be of sufficient length to reach at least six inches above the horizontal wire and should be tied tightly to it at the junction.

In place of using twine for tying some growers have adopted a wire clasp which seems to suit the purpose admirably and will no doubt become popular as its merits are recognized.

To prevent sagging of the horizontal wire use a frame made of ⅜-inch gas tubing of the same shape as the end frames and joined at the corners by elbows, the legs to be of sufficient length to reach the floor of the bench. These require no nailing to steady them, tying to the horizontal wires being sufficient to keep them in place.

These supports are practically indestructible, neat in appearance (which is considerably enhanced by a couple of coats of white paint) and at planting time are easily removed by detaching the wires from the frames and hanging the wires to the roofs. After the benches are planted they are easily and quickly replaced, entirely eliminate the old system of wood supports, nailing, sawing, etc., which detracted so much from the neatness and beauty of a house.

Many of the other systems, while possessing some points of merit, have been tried by myself and other growers and found unsuited for use in large places. This system which I have described, with local variations, seems at present to be the most practical and in point of efficiency and expediency the most suitable. RIBES.

SOLID BEDS OR BENCHES.

I am now building a new house, or rather two houses 68x100 feet, half for carnations and half for roses. I want to know if you would advise me to use benches or beds? My soil is a red clay, well drained; that is, it does not hold water like pipe clay; it is rather porus and water sinks rapidly. I am a beginner without any experience. Lumber is cheap and I have enough cypress on hand to bench my entire house, but I want to know which is best. It seems to me the solid bed would take much less water and less heat. T. W. L.

Some few expert growers of roses and carnations prefer solid beds, not the old solid beds of twenty years ago, but beds constructed on a scientific basis with many variations and which entail a great deal of skill in construction, planting, watering and feeding; more care, in fact, than a table bench requires.

Seeing that lumber of such good quality is so plentiful and cheap and as he is a beginner I would advise T. W. L. to use the table bench, giving three-quarters of an inch space between bottom boards for drainage. By using the table bench better control can be kept on roots, watering and heating of the soil. The majority of successful rose and carnation growers are still in favor of and using the table bench in some form or other. RIBES.

TARIFF ON CUTTINGS.

Under date of May 16, the Treasury Department has issued the following to customs officials:

Referring to the decision of the Board of United States General Appraisers, G. A. 5645 of April 14, 1904 (published in full in the REVIEW for April 28) wherein it is held that certain so called rooted rose cuttings are not dutiable as rose plants at 2½ cents each under paragraph 252 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, but should be classified as cuttings of plants commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock at twenty-five per cent ad valorem under the same paragraph, I have to advise you that the Department does not concur in the conclusions reached by the Board of United States General Appraisers in this case.

As the record presented in this case is not very satisfactory, no appeal has been directed from the decision of the board therein. You are instructed, however, not to apply the said decision to any other importations at your port, it being the desire of the Department to prepare a new case for the consideration of the Board of United States General Appraisers which will more fully present the issue. ROBERT B. ARMSTRONG, Ass't. Sec'y.

The case referred to is that of the American Express Company, which had imported through the port of Buffalo certain rooted rose cuttings for Heller Bros., John Burton and others. The collector assessed duty at 2½ cents each, the cuttings being Bride, Maid, Meteor, Perle, Sunset, etc. As previous decisions of the Board of General Appraisers, to the effect that "rose cuttings are not dutiable as rose plants" at 2½ cents each, had been allowed by the Treasury Department to stand without appeal, it is likely that exception is taken to that part of this decision which apparently offers a ruling on other articles than rose cuttings.

The law is: "Stocks, cuttings, and seedlings of all fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen, shrubs and vines, manetti, multiflora, and brier rose, and all trees, shrubs, plants and vines, commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock, not specially provided for in this Act, twenty-five per centum ad valorem."

The Appraisers said: "This is not altogether free from ambiguity, owing to the uncertainty as to how far the expression 'stocks, cuttings and seedlings of' qualifies the clauses which follow it in the paragraph. Since rooted rose cuttings can not be said to be either 'trees,' 'shrubs,' 'plants,' or 'vines,' if these goods are dutiable at all under the provision referred to, it would seem to be as 'cuttings of plants commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock.' This construction, it will be seen, extends the effect of the expression 'stocks, cuttings and seedlings of' to all the subsequent members of the paragraph, and reads it as though it were printed as follows:

Stocks, cuttings and seedlings (not specially provided for in the act) of all

(1) fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen.

(2) shrubs and vines.

(3) manetti, multiflora and brier rose.

(4) trees, shrubs, plants and vines, commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock.

The Board is of opinion that this interpretation should be adopted. Although it may appear doubtful upon a strictly grammatical construction of the paragraph, it accords with what we believe to have been the purpose of Congress, viz., to include within the comprehensive language practically everything in the nature of nursery or greenhouse stock."

BLIGHT ON TULIPS.

S. J. G. is not by any means alone in having blight on his tulips. We have seen some very badly affected batches the past few years. Our first experience of it was in 1903, when many of our late blooming or species tulips were badly diseased. We attributed this mainly to having left the bulbs undisturbed for three seasons. Bulbs lifted each season were clean. This spring we only noted a trace of the blight on two varieties, Clusiana and Lownei, both small species.

Last year we had blight on quite a number of species, many being entirely ruined. Such naturally robust growing sorts as Gesneriana, Bouton d'or and retroflexa, as well as the bybloemens, bizarres and breeders were badly affected. We have not had any blight at any time on the early flowering bedding tulips but believe they will take it, particularly if not lifted annually.

In regard to fungicides, we have tried Bordeaux mixture, but with little success. This was not used until the trouble showed itself. Had we commenced to use it earlier it might have been more efficacious. We find the best means of keeping tulips clean is to replant all kinds annually. Probably the Darwins and one or two other robust species may live from year to year and be exempt, but new soil is in our estimation the only method to keep blight in check.

Narcissi, such as rugilobus, biflorus and spurius, even blighted in 1903, but were clean this year. These are less injured by blight than tulips, however. All the iris family and a considerable number of other hardy plants were blighted last year, but are clean at present. No doubt the peculiarities of the season are in part accountable for these changes, but we think new location and the discarding of badly affected stock the true remedy. English and Dutch growers have experienced this same trouble of late years, so we have the satisfaction of knowing that we are not alone in our misfortunes. W. N. Craig.

CARNATION NOTES.

Topping in the Field.

Almost as soon as you finish planting the young stock in the field, you will have to begin to top some of them. Those which you planted first have had a good rain or two and have started into a vigorous growth. In this locality the weather has been ideal for the young plants in the field. We have had a few hot days, but only a few; most of the days have been cool and lately we have had numerous light showers, which have kept the ground in fine shape. Already we can see the young shoots break where the plants were stopped at planting time, and the shoots that were not stopped are shooting up and will have to be stopped every few days, as they need it.

In the first two toppings you either make or ruin the shapeliness of your plants and so you want to look after this operation closely. There are some varieties which naturally make a shapely plant, such as Joost, Flora Hill and a few others, but most of the varieties we grow in quantity, and especially the less grassy ones, need to be topped several times before the plants will form a strong, compact body, such as we want to plant in the fall. Much depends on doing it at the right time. If you allow the shoots to grow too long the plants become top-heavy and a hard rain or wind will cause them to lie on one side and before you know it you have ruined the shape of the plants. The ideal carnation plant will stand up like an azalea, with a compact body and numerous short-jointed shoots ready to run up and bloom as soon as the plants become established in the houses. You don't want a lot of plants that will lie all over the bench, or have to be supported as soon as they are planted.

You need not make such a scientific operation of this topping as some growers would have you think. You don't need a knife whetted up to a razor edge, nor do you really need any knife at all if you look after them regularly. When the shoot lengthens out enough so that you can see the stem between the joints you can snap it with your thumb and finger and the break will be as clean as if it were cut with a knife, and it takes much less time. You must see to it, though, that there is no tearing or bruising, to avoid which you must do the topping when the plants are fresh, in the morning or toward evening, and not too long after a rain on a hot day. In fact, they should not be topped at all when in a wilted condition.

Two to three joints is enough to allow for each break on most varieties, as symmetry and compactness should be your aim. If you have four or five joints the two top joints only will break and soon your plants are top-heavy.

THE CHICAGO PREMIUMS.

The Horticultural Society of Chicago has distributed the preliminary list of premiums for the exhibition to be held at the Fine Arts building and Auditorium in November. The list is on the same plan as that of previous years, but in many instances the premiums are more liberal than heretofore and the sweepstake feature has been employed to a greater degree than in the past. The total amount of money carried in the regular classes is $2,448 and special classes will be added later.

In cut blooms of chrysanthemums the premiums for vases of twenty-five blooms are $12 and $10. For vases of six the premiums are $3 and $2. For best vases of 100 blooms premiums of $50 and $40 are offered. There is $50 to be divided between the two best vases of 100 flowers no bloom of which exceeds four inches in diameter. The other premiums in this section are equally liberal and should call out a representative exhibit. In the classes for chrysanthemum plants $15 and $10 are the premiums where a single specimen is called for. The best three standards will win $50 and the second premium in this class is $35. There are also very liberal premiums in the classes for five and ten specimen plants and for twenty-five plants grown to single stem and also for group of chrysanthemum plants to occupy fifty square feet. These are calculated to bring out a good showing from the private establishments.

The cut blooms of orchids will receive $70, divided in first and second premiums. In the miscellaneous plant classes the premiums range somewhat higher than before and in cut roses very liberal offers are made. The best fifty American Beauties will win $50 and there are second and third premiums of $35 and $20. The best seventy-five Liberty will receive $35 and the second best vase $25. In the classes for 100 tea roses of the several varieties the premiums are $20 and $12.

In the carnation section, classes are provided for all the standard varieties by name, the first premium being $4 and the second $2 on fifty blooms, with premiums of $3 and $2 for twenty-five blooms of new varieties, introductions of 1904. There are special classes for the several colors in which 100 blooms are required, with premiums of $10 and $7. There is a sweepstakes premium offered for the best exhibition of 100 blooms. The premiums for seedlings, where twenty blooms are required, are $10 in each class and there is a sweepstakes for the best exhibit among the seedlings. Sweepstakes are also offered in the classes for seedling chrysanthemums and there is a silver cup for the best new rose never before exhibited.

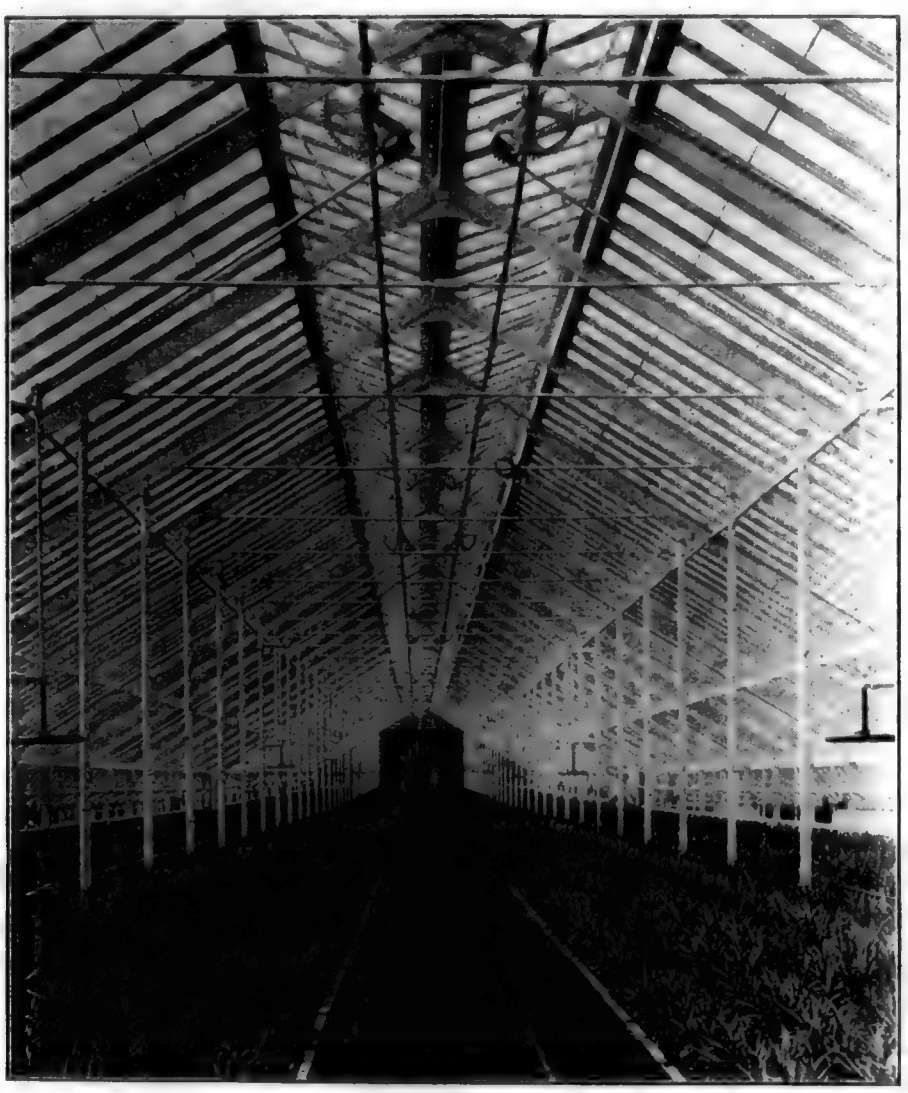
Copies of the list may be had by addressing E. A. Kanst, assistant secretary, 5700 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

Vegetable Forcing.

VEGETABLE markets are ruled by the outdoor crops now in market. At Chicago cucumbers were worth only from 20 to 45 cents a dozen and leaf lettuce 15 to 25 cents a case, May 25.

REVIEW OF THE SEASON.



The season of vegetable forcing is just about closed. It is late now for making any fresh plantations, so all that remains to be done is to care for the remnant of the crops now maturing. Tomatoes and cucumbers are about the only crops left, and they are about the only crops that it will pay to hang on to this late in the season, as lettuce, cauliflower and such subjects are, or will soon be, plentiful outdoors in most sections of the country. The present is a good time to look over the houses and find out what painting and repairs are necessary, so that steps can be taken to have this work done in good season, then everything will be in readiness when the time comes for again beginning operations. As the work practically begins in August, with the sowing of such subjects as tomatoes and cucumbers, the few weeks between now and then will soon slip past, hence the necessity of having everything ready to avoid both hurry and delay.

Though the season, taken all through, has not been a record-breaker as regards prices, still, fairly good prices have in general been obtained, but on account of the severity of the winter a good deal of the profits have been eaten up in the extra coal necessary to keep things warm. Of the several subjects, tomatoes have fluctuated least of any in price, 20 cents per pound being the average highest; on very few occasions did they exceed this figure. Cucumbers have run about $1.25 per dozen, but have fluctuated from $1 to $1.50 for best quality. Mushrooms have run from 35 to 60 cents per pound, occasionally rising as high as 75 cents, though 40 cents has been about the average best price. Lettuce has been very uncertain, the best quality of heads sometimes selling as low as $3.25 per barrel and running anywhere from that up to $6, though around $4 has been about the average price. For cauliflower $3.50 per dozen has been about the average high price, though they have occasionally sold as high as $5. Rhubarb has ranged from 3 to 7 cents per pound, and the highest price for asparagus has been pretty well maintained at $6 per dozen bunches, while the best prices for radishes have run from 40 to 60 cents per dozen bunches.

Now is a good time for the grower to take a review of the season and find out what has paid best, so that he can decide what it is best to grow most of another season. So much depends on the market at which the produce is sold that the producer is the best judge of his own individual case. Though the best quality will always command the highest figure of the day, the fluctuations in price from day to day are due more to supply and demand than to the quality of the article produced, hence the necessity of the grower selecting the article with which the market at which he sells is least likely to be overrun.

It seems strange, but nevertheless a fact, that all the growers in the same section will often get running on the same thing, the result being that all available markets are soon overrun and prices necessarily cut. A good deal of this is often due to locality, which may be very suitable for certain products, but seeing that supply and demand have so much influence on the market prices, the grower must get away from the usual rut to give himself a better chance of getting full value for his products.

CORRECTIONS.

An error in proofreading caused Hunt's spiked cemetery vase to be quoted in our last issue at $2.25 per dozen and $1.25 per dozen in barrel lots, when $1.95 per dozen in barrel lots is correct, as was quoted in the larger advertisement May 5. This was in the advertisement of E. H. Hunt, Chicago.

In the carnation advertisement of C. Eisele, Philadelphia, last week the variety Estelle was named instead of Ethel Crocker. "I was busy all week answering letters and returning money sent with orders, because I didn't have the stock," writes Mr. Eisele.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The vast supply of outdoor lilac has given way this week to the peony vanguard, which is arriving from the south in generally good condition. Home-grown peonies seem unlikely to be in before Decoration day, though last season they were nearly over at that time. Calla lilies are becoming scarce, but Easter lilies are in fair supply and can be had in quantity if ordered ahead. Carnations promise to be in large supply for Memorial day at slightly advanced figures. Some dealers have already stopped taking advance orders. The feature of the rose market is the arrival of new crop Beauties, in quantity, Leo Niessen receiving 1,800 in a single shipment on Monday. They are medium and short-stemmed flowers with nice foliage. S. S. Pennock is receiving Hemerocallis flava, the day lily, lemon yellow in color, suitable for decorating.

The Strafford Flower Farm.

Through the courtesy of Samuel S. Pennock, the well-known wholesale florist of this city, I was enabled to visit this enterprising establishment some time since. The party was to have consisted of S. S. Pennock, A. B. Cartledge, David Rust and Phil, but unluckily Mr. Cartledge was obliged to secure some plants needed in his store, so the number was reduced to three. Some doubts had been expressed as to whether the representatives of two rival papers should go together on a visit of inspection, but these doubts must have been dispelled long before the train reached Strafford, a station on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad, lying between Wayne and Devon.

The greenhouses are built on a piece of ground admirably adapted for the purpose, situated within easy walking distance of the station. The visitors were met by the proprietor, Edward A. Stroud, who conducted them through his houses. They are three in number, each 30x300, fourteen feet high at the ridge and about six feet at the sides, even-span, two top and two side ventilators. Each house has four five-foot benches and is divided at right angles through the center by a broad pathway, with double doors at the sides of each house. The framework of the houses is of iron, the glass 16x24 inches, double thick. The roof bars and benches are of cypress. There is also a smaller propagating house, very light. The total area of glass in the four houses is nearly 30,000 square feet.

The entire place is devoted to carnations grown for high-grade cut flowers. Mr. Stroud's idea is to grow only the best varieties, giving them all possible encouragement. He does not believe in forcing crops for special occasions, preferring to keep the plants in perfect health, taking no chances on injuring them through undue exertion to produce a heavy crop at a given time. Most of the prominent commercial varieties of carnations are grown and find favor here. May Naylor, while not generally grown, is a great favorite. Viola Allen has not proved a worker. Harry Fenn, crimson, a fine, robust grower, is thought promising. The plants are supported by strings tied to two rows of wires stretched the length of the bench, one over the other. When we saw the propagating house it was filled with as pretty a lot of young plants as any carnationist could desire. I think we were told 40,000 of them, all in pots. Since then they have been planted outside, as shown in one of the accompanying photographs. Enough for four benches, or about 3,600, will be kept in pots to be benched next month. It takes about 22,000 plants to fill the houses.

Three large boilers, built by Hitchings & Co., heat the place by hot water. They are located in a neat, stone stoke hole, light and well ventilated. The fuel used is pea coal. At the opposite end of the plant from the stoke hole is the building devoted to office, cooling and packing rooms, which are commodious and exceedingly well appointed.

The enterprise and judgment displayed in the construction and arrangement of the place reflects credit on the proprietor, as does its condition on him and on his foreman, Thomas Beattie. The plans were drawn and executed by Hitchings & Co. The cut flowers are distributed by Samuel S. Pennock.

The impression created by the Strafford Flower Farm is distinctly favorable. A modern plant, costly in construction, very light, durable, with little likelihood of repairs proving a serious item for many a day. Near by is the old Eagle Hotel, used by Mr. Stroud as a sort of fish house, where he entertains the good florists with great big, hot pies with true country hospitality.

Various Notes.

M. Rice sailed from Hamburg on the steamer Moltke May 18. B. Eschner and Eugene Weiss expect to meet him next Sunday.

Edward Reid shipped an order for 1,500 roses to go up the state to the Knights Templar reunion.

C. F. Edgar & Co. are receiving shipments of cape jasmine from the south.

J. Henry Bartram, of Lansdowne, has been sending some fine Beauties to Edward Reid.

Albert M. Herr, of Lancaster, is sending exceptionally nice Prosperity and Roosevelt carnations to S. S. Pennock.

Considerable comment was caused last week by entire shipments of carnations going to sleep the day after their arrival in the commission houses. Inquiry among the dealers brought out the opinion that this trouble is due partly to the high temperature in the greenhouses and shipping boxes, partly to the plants being out of condition, and partly to excess of moisture in the air. The dealers are taking special pains to keep the flowers in cool, dry cellars. They suggest that perfect ventilation and picking the flowers tight will do much to avert this evil.

H. Bayersdorfer and wife sailed for Europe last Tuesday.

The well-known carnation grower, L. B. Eastburn, of Kennett Square, will continue to lease his greenhouses to a tomato grower.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions have not materially changed during the past week. A spell of cool, cloudy and showery weather, which terminated on the 21st, considerably shortened the output of flowers, but the demand was not sufficiently strong to cause any advance. Prices have not varied much from a week ago. Carnations continue abundant and of fine quality. A few fancies bring $2 to $2.50 per 100, but good blooms sell at 50 cents to $1 and inferior ones for anything they will bring. Fortunately fewer poor flowers are coming in each year.

Bulbous stock is now about over, except for Narcissus poeticus and a few bunches of Gesneriana and other late tulips. Lilac is abundant, but as almost every one grows it there is no money in it. An immense quantity promises to be available for Memorial day trade. Outdoor lily of the valley is of unusually fine quality, entirely outclassing indoor stock, the latter looking wretched in comparison.

Bedding plant trade has been late in getting under way, but is now extremely active. All the florists who grow this stock are very busy. A very large quantity is being used this week in the cemeteries.

Everything at the time of writing points to a record breaking Memorial day trade. Although more outdoor material than usual will be available for the cheaper bouquets and wreaths, the demand will use up every greenhouse flower. Roses and carnations promise to be abundant and of much better quality than usual. There are the usual large contributions of antirrhinum, candytuft, spiræa, callas, Lilium longiflorum, L. candidum, geraniums and other seasonable flowers.

Club Meeting.

There was an excellent attendance at the regular monthly meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on May 17 to listen to Carl Blomberg's paper on alpine plants. Mr. Blomberg is an enthusiastic botanist and lover of hardy plants, and spoke very entertainingly. Being unable to give a complete list of suitable rock plants in one evening he promised to continue the subject on some future occasion. An animated discussion followed the reading of the paper. Robert Cameron protested against the term alpine plants being used to designate the plants named by the lecturer; not over a dozen kinds named were really such and most of them were excellent subjects in the herbaceous border. Rock plants should have been the title of the lecture. With this view Mr. Blomberg concurred. The lecturer had no faith in the finer hybrid aquilegias, as they are too short lived. They are best treated as biennials, a view concurred in by others present.

In regard to the culture and propagation of the pretty and popular Daphne cneorum, Julius Heurlin stated that he had the best success in rooting this subject in August in frames with a bottom heat of 110 degrees; keep frames shaded and close, syringed once or twice a day, but not very damp at the root. Treated in this way, out of a batch of 12,000 cuttings inserted last August he only lost 200.

An interesting exchange of experiences in regard to the losses in trees and shrubs during the late severe winter brought out the fact that gardens in and around Boston generally suffered less than those a few miles inland. J. W. Duncan gave a long list of plants injured in the Boston park system. Among others not yet named in this column were Berberis vulgaris, quite badly cut down; cornus in many cases cut to the ground, and all flower buds killed; Ligustrum amurense and L. regelianum stood the winter poorly. Among the loniceras, L. fragrantissima was cut down, as were Elæagnus longipes, kerrias, bignonias and rhodotypos. Prunus maritima was killed and P. Americana cut back severely. Rosa Wichuraiana was also badly hurt and R. multiflora killed.

Experiences as to injury were also furnished by President Pettigrew, Duncan Finlayson, W. J. Stewart, W. N. Craig, James Wheeler, Wm. Downs, Charles Sander, J. Westwood and others and it was generally agreed that the late winter was the most destructive ever experienced.

President Pettigrew announced the following committee on prizes for the chrysanthemum show next November and the rose show in March, 1905: Messrs. Cameron, Wilde, Montgomery, Craig and Wheeler. Several new members were elected.

The exhibits included a collection of hardy plants from Carl Blomberg, including Cypripedium arietinum, C. pubescens and C. parviflorum, Dodecatheon Meadia, D. integrifolium, etc. Robert Cameron showed a grandly flowered specimen of Dendrobium tortile, an old orchid, introduced nearly sixty years ago, but not often seen in good condition. The flowers are of a very pale yellow color suffused into purplish rose.

W. N. Craig showed a collection of late flowering tulips, including Didieri, retroflexa, Gesneriana major and Gesneriana spathulata, Bouton d'or, Picotee, Golden Crown and bybloemens, also flowers of Gardenia Fortuniana (Veitch's form) and sprays of Crimson Rambler, Philadelphia Rambler, Queen Alexandra and Farquhar roses.

Various Notes.

An effort by the Massachusetts Forestry Association, State Board of Agriculture and other bodies to have the state legislature appropriate $300,000 toward exterminating the gypsy moth has been defeated by a considerable majority and the motion to appropriate $60,000 for the introduction of natural parasitic foes was also defeated. It is probable that this terrible pest will cause widespread destruction this year, for the efforts of individual proprietors and local bodies will avail little.

Active work in fighting the elm leaf beetle has commenced in a number of towns and cities. The last few warm days have made the beetle quite active. Disparene, a form of arsenate of lead in paste form, is generally used.

EDWARD J. BERTERMANN.

The accompanying portrait of Edward J. Bertermann is from a sketch made by the artist of the Indianapolis Sentinel and was published with the following note:

Edward J. Bertermann, general manager of the Bertermann Bros. Company, is one of the most thoroughly equipped floriculturists west of the Alleghany mountains. The company, of whose extensive business he has for a long time had the practical business management, besides the subject of this sketch, includes three other brothers—John Bertermann, president of the corporation; Walter H. Bertermann, vice-president, and Irwin F. Bertermann, secretary-treasurer.

The company long since established at 3002 E. Washington street, extensive greenhouses, where a large and varied stock is grown. With a thorough knowledge of the floral art Edward J. Bertermann has coupled the force that has come to him from years of study of business methods and this naturally, has rendered him invaluable in bringing trade of the Bertermann Bros. Company to the splendid and profitable condition it enjoys in the local business world at this time.

The Bertermann brothers have long been actively identified with the local, state and national association of florists, and the magnificent success which has attended the annual chrysanthemum shows in this city to a very large degree may be attributed to the wise judgment and excellent advice of the gentleman whose portrait The Sentinel presents today. Mr. Bertermann, who has been in this country and city for twenty-seven years, will shortly leave for Europe and recently took out his naturalization papers in the Superior Court in order that he might go back to the land of his ancestors a genuine and unquestionable American citizen.

He resides in a pretty home at 628 Lockerbie street, and is a warm personal friend of his neighbor, James Whitcomb Riley.

HANOVER, PA.—F. E. Cremer has had some very nice contracts for plant beds in the National Cemetery at Gettysburg.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The weather conditions are at last seasonable and the market seems to have settled down to its usual summer dullness. School commencement, Decoration day demands and June brides may combine to lift things slightly, but the general sentiment is one of resignation to the inevitable. A reduction in the overwhelming supplies of the last two weeks may enhance values temporarily for Memorial day, but at the present writing there is enough of everything and to spare. Outdoor stock is abundant, especially valley and lilac, which are everywhere and fine in quality and popular. The lower grades of roses and carnations come in floods and have no permanent value. Cape jasmines were a drug on Saturday, one firm with a shipment of 1,000 not having sold a dozen up to closing time. Lilies continue plentiful and cheap.

Various Notes.

Nick Schreiner, of J. K. Allen's force, will celebrate the outing holiday by marrying Miss Mamie Flynn, June 29.

Sigmund Geller returned home from his European trip on the Kaiser Wilhelm last Tuesday.

Alex Guttman finds the added convenience of two telephones a necessity and has no complaint to make of the season's business.

Jos. Leikens, of Newport, was in town last week making some extensive purchases for his new store on Bellevue avenue there. He seems well pleased with his progress and has the filling of the Beekman estate to complete, as an anchor to windward.

The outing is next in interest to the club's peony and ladies' night on June 13. The official program will be distributed next week and the list of sports and prizes far exceeds that of last year, while the attendance promises a similar increase. The committee ask all who will attend to communicate with Treasurer Schenck at once that ample provision may be made for all. Among the prizes already offered are:

Five for the ladies' bowling match by President Traendly; nine bottles of champagne by John B. Nugent to the winners of the base ball match; $6 by John Raynor and $5 by W. C. Mansfield for the men's bowling prizes; prizes for the one mile race and the married men's fifty-yard race, by Ford Bros.; 100 yard race, by Philip F. Kessler; half-mile walking match, by W. H. Gunther; boys' fifty-yard race, under 8 years, by Jos. Millang, two prizes $4 and $2; boys' race, under 12, by John Young; boys' race, under 16, by Walter Sheridan; girls' race, under 8, by J. K. Allen; girls' race, under 12, by Chas. Schenck; girls' race, under 16, by Moore, Hentz & Nash; two prizes for married ladies' race, by Sigmund Geller; old maids' race, by Joseph A. Millang; 100 yards special for growers, and their foreman only, the Lord & Burnham prizes $5 and $3; girls' race under 18, a $5 bolt of ribbon and a special press bowling prize of a handsome bronze inkstand, by John Birnie. Many more prizes and contests will be reported in our next. If any other of the club members desire to give further prizes they can at once communicate with President Traendly.

Immense importations of European stock are arriving, among them a shipment of 600 bay trees to Julius Roehrs, many of them magnificent specimens. The demand for the bay seems continuous and their use almost universal. Hardly a hotel or restaurant is without them. Their popularity increases and the oversupply which seemed at one time to threaten has not materialized. Revolutionized Coney Island, with its magnificent parks and "dreamland," has found the bay just the tree for its summer decoration and shipments to out-of-town florists are increasing wonderfully every year.

John Scott has been visiting Boston, Newport and other New England cities, exhibiting a specimen of his fern. Its character and rapidity of growth all appeal to the commercial growers and he reports a great demand for it.

Alfred Langjahr, of the Brooklyn Horticultural Society, reported a special meeting Monday evening, when a final disposition of the surplus was made and arrangements for a farewell banquet of the members consummated.

Hicks & Crawbuck, the wholesalers of Brooklyn, lost a valuable wagon last week in a collision with a trolley, the horse and driver escaping injury.

June 8 and 9 the American Peony Society will make an exhibit at the Bronx Botanic Garden, by invitation of the New York Horticultural Society.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The men of the market have been between the devil and the deep sea this week. The change to hot, close, damp weather when the plants were full of buds holding for Memorial day, resulted in a great rush of stock of such inferior grade that the wholesaler dares not ship it out to his customer for fear of losing his trade and at the same time the grower thinks he is entitled to returns in keeping with the shipping quotations. The avalanche of undesirable material has completely inundated the market for the first few days of this week. The local retailers will not accept this inferior stuff any more than will the out-of-town customer, and the Greeks refuse to handle "bum" roses and sleepy carnations when there is such a wealth of seasonable outdoor flowers with which they can do business. Consequently the waste is high.

Of all the roses, American Beauty is holding its quality the best. There are still large supplies of long stock and an unlimited quantity of shorts. Color is lacking to a certain degree, but compares favorably with that of Bridesmaid, or any other colored rose except Liberty and Meteor. The Bride is quite eclipsed by Kaiserin, although the supply of the latter is small. All roses are small in bud, open and soft in texture, in fact in many of them the petals seem almost to have rotted as a result of hot, damp weather. Much of the foliage is unsightly because of mildew.

There are large supplies of carnations at hand, but they will not stand a long journey; in fact those which are received fresh in the morning, if not moved out, are asleep by the following morning and wholly unsalable. If they go to sleep in the wholesaler's ice box it is not to be wondered at that they go to sleep in the shipping boxes, and neither is it to be wondered at that the customer objects to the grade of stock he is getting, but it is wholly beyond the control of the wholesaler

This does not speak for the satisfaction which should attend the very heavy business which will be done the latter part of the week for Memorial day. The only saving clause is that Memorial day is pre-eminently an occasion where low prices are more necessary than quality. There will be an abundance of the "our selection" grades, but prices on the very few good roses are likely to advance.

The retailer who is not satisfied with the quality of roses and carnations can fall back on the peony. The receipts in the last three days have been phenomenal, far ahead of anticipations and there are now literally thousands of dozens in the cold storage houses waiting for the rush at the last of the week. It is stock from Missouri and southern Illinois, the sources from which the best of the early cuts have come in previous years, and the receipts have been literally by the carload. Quality is excellent and the varieties of the best, there being a considerable proportion of Festiva maxima, and a few of the fine red, Richardson's rubra superba.

There is pretty sure to be a slaughter in the cape jasmines, for there are hundreds of cases in cold storage, early receipts which could not be moved and which are held on the chance of a market between now and next Monday. The best stock seen so far is that from C. W. Benson, at Alvin, Texas. As an example of the way it goes, a Dr. J. D. Ward, of Dickinson, Tex., on Monday shipped 25,000 capes consigned to the American Express Company instead of to a wholesale florist. Doubtless he thought the express company would be able to find a better market than the florist would, but the express company turned them over to the commission men, dividing the shipment into two or three lots. It was not good stuff, and the consignee will be lucky if he gets any return.

The local lilac is at its height, but as the weather is very warm it is likely to be pretty well off by the end of the week; a great deal of it shakes badly already. Emil Buettner is sending in some remarkably fine outdoor white lilac. The Kennicotts, at The Grove, are sending in a big crop of outdoor tulips which are of good quality, but not active sale, as the supply now exceeds the demand. There are also considerable receipts of parrot tulips. Outdoor valley is in and there are still violets in the market. The lily situation does not improve and there are untold thousands of sweet peas to be had without notice. If there is any scarcity in anything it is not on record.

Various Notes.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has just received a good-sized shipment of Belgian palms in the larger sizes, for which there is an active demand.

John Poehlmann is suffering with a carbuncle on his neck. They are just now getting in a large crop of Beauties.

Wietor Bros. are cutting from their house of Kaiserin roses and the stock is of very fine quality.

The Kennicott Bros. Co. has arrangements which bring them each year the big cut of peonies in the vicinity of Sarcoxie, Mo. A week ago Mr. Pieser said that he counted on a big cut for Decoration day, and now he says it is three times what he anticipated. But as the quality is all that could be asked, a good market is looked for. The whites were selling at $1 a dozen early in the week. There is, however, likely to be a bad break in prices when the local crop comes on.

George Reinberg has his big plantation of carnations all in the field. It was a big task because he is largely extending his glass this year and because he does a big business in the fall in field-grown carnation plants.

John Sinner says that his firm is steadily extending its shipping trade and that he expects another year to do a big business in this line.

E. C. Amling is getting some splendid gladioli from the same grower who is so successful with his lilies.

Only one bowler brought his good eye Tuesday evening and even he fell down in the fourth game. The score:

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week cut flower business was more active than for some time and the florists about town report some large orders for funerals, wedding receptions, dinners and World's Fair work, where a great deal of entertaining is going on and the commissioners of the different state buildings seem liberal in regard to floral decorations. This used up the large surplus of stock at the wholesale houses. Transient trade among the down-town retailers is keeping up pretty well. Saturday and today, Monday, receipts are lighter in all lines except outdoor stuff, which is very plentiful. First-class stock of all kinds is being cleaned up pretty well and the glut seems over for a while at least, and prices, too, are somewhat higher on best grades. Orders for Memorial day are coming in now and the prospects are for good trade on that day. Work for school commencements early next month will help keep us busy up to June 15, after which the summer stillness will be on, unless the World's Fair changes matters for this summer, and a great many of our florists are looking forward to good business right along.

Roses and carnations, which have been abundant, have slacked up somewhat, no job lots are offered and the fakirs have to content themselves with cape jasmines for their street sales. American Beauties are in fair demand, with top prices at $2.50 per dozen. In smaller roses all varieties are in good demand, at prices from $4 to $8 per 100. Carnations are still in fine condition and the demand uses up about all that come in. Fancies are again up to $3, and $2 for firsts. Commons run from $1 to $1.50 per 100. Sweet peas are coming in by the thousands and sell fairly well, at 50 and 75 cents per 100. Pink, white and lavender are the choice sellers. Peonies are selling clean at $5 per 100. Cape jasmines are 50 and 75 cents per 100 and $5 per 1,000. Outdoor stock, lilac, snowballs and valley, are selling slowly. Smilax in long strings brings 25 cents, shorts 15 cents. Other greens are in good supply.

Among the plantsmen trade in all kinds of plants is booming and some have already completely sold out. Geraniums are in great demand, in fact anything in the plant line is in big demand. The greenhouse men will surely reap a harvest this year. The weather, too, has been favorable to planting out the last two weeks.

Various Notes.

George M. Kellogg was in town last week attending the good roads convention, which was in session all of last week in the Exposition building. N. R. Cook, late with A. Miller, at Pawtucket, Diagram of the Trade Exhibition Hall for the S. A. F. Convention at St. Louis, August 16 to 19.

R. I., is now employed at Mr. Kellogg's place in Pleasant Hill.

C. Young & Sons Co. report that they are almost cleaned out of bedding stock and in another week will make a clean sweep of everything. This has been an exceptionally good year with all the St. Louis florists in the plant line, as all are reporting a big plant trade in everything.

Arthur Ellison is off on a fishing trip down south for a month. Arthur is taking his vacation early this year. He will be back soon to get in condition for the convention bowling.

Leo Osternei is out at the World's Fair grounds selling palms for Siebrecht & Son, New York. Their salesroom is in the Horticulture building. Harry Siebrecht was here last week. They will send two car loads of fine palms for exhibition. His firm will also make a big display at our trade exhibition in August.

There were no roses on exhibition in the Horticulture building for the opening day of the rose show, which was set for May 21 to 25 inclusive.

George Waldbart has some elegant bay trees in all shapes in front of his store on Grand avenue. Mr. Waldbart is having a very busy season, with receptions and dinner parties. Funeral work, too, has been plentiful. A great show of fine blooming plants can also be seen at this place.

On Tuesday of last week, Charlie Schoenele, who is with Mrs. M. M. Ayers, was held up by highwaymen and relieved of his fine gold watch and chain. Charlie was lucky at that; he only had $1.10 in money about him, so they gave him back 10 cents for car fare.

Planting has begun in City Hall park. Park Commissioner Aull says that 30,000 plants were used in this park. The large center beds are the same as last year, the only new feature a few small beds around the big ones in the grass plots. All parks under his jurisdiction will be finished by June 1. Some new designs are promised in Forest park this year. Mr. Aull has plenty in the greenhouses at Forest park to make the parks all attractive this summer.

H. M. Schisler, of the Schisler-Cornelli Seed Co., reports that the University Hotel has been selected as the meeting place of the American Seed Trade Association, which holds its twenty-second annual convention here next month, June 21 to 23. Visiting members are requested to take the Market street cars, which run past the Union station and will take them direct in front of the hotel, which adjoins the World's Fair grounds. A meeting has been called for this week of the local seedsmen to select committees who will have charge of entertaining the visiting seedsmen.

The huge floral clock at the World's Fair grounds is almost completed. The minute hand, seventy-four feet long, is now in place. The hands weigh 2,500 pounds. Everything is worked out in plants. J. W. Dunford, at Clayton, is growing some 15,000 verbenas and geraniums for the clock. This, when completed, will be a great attraction for all visitors.

At the dedication of the French building last week 5,000 American Beauties were given away. Every lady visitor on entering the building got one for a present. The rooms were also tastefully decorated with a fine lot of palms.

In the Texas building last week Mrs. James Madison Bass, of Temple, Texas, distributed 50,000 cape jasmine buds to visitors. This will continue as long as they last.

During the World's Press Parliament, which convened last week in Festival Hall at the World's Fair grounds, journalists from thirty-five nations were present. Several of the state buildings entertained their press representatives. Every building was handsomely decorated and the Press building was made especially attractive for the representatives.

The Federation of Women's Clubs, which met here last week, was entertained on Friday by Mrs. William Trelease, who gave them a garden party in the Missouri Botanic Garden and 2,000 of the club women were in attendance. The garden presented a handsome appearance. Refreshments were served on the lawn, after which the hostess and her assistant personally conducted the tours through the entire garden and greenhouses, which was a great treat to the visitors. This the ladies considered one of the features of their convention.

PACIFIC COAST.

Elmhurst, Cal.—Paul W. Grallert, who has been located in the nursery business at Colma, is building the largest greenhouses in the state at his property on the Yoakum tract. There are now twelve nurseries located at Elmhurst within the radius of a mile.

The California deciduous fruit season opened April 30, with the shipment of a box of Sacramento valley cherries. The first box was sold in Chicago for $25 or $3.12 a pound. The second sale was made in New York and the figure was $21. The third sale, made in Philadelphia, at auction, was a record breaker, eight pounds of cherries bringing the remarkable price of $70.

Fresno, Cal.—S. W. Marshall, the well-known pioneer nurseryman, has just reorganized his business and has incorporated several new departments. The business, established fifteen years ago, has up to the present time been conducted along the lines of a general nursery. But the local demand for high class ornamental trees and plants has increased so within the last five years that it has been found necessary to expand. Hereafter the company will be prepared to supply all classes of nursery stock, both fruit and ornamental. They are also planning a new range of greenhouses for growing cut flowers for the local trade. As California is fast becoming "the land of beautiful homes," they will also be prepared to execute landscape work of every description, based upon a thorough knowledge of soil and climatic conditions.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Spring Flower Show.

The third annual spring exhibition of the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society opened May 12. This is not only the finest show ever given by this society from the quantity of exhibits but from a standpoint of quality also. Great credit is due to H. Plath and the board of directors, for certainly there has never been anything like it in San Francisco. The section of the nave of the ferry building in which the exhibits have been placed resembles a beautiful garden and the stands against the walls were piled high with enormous bunches of roses and carnations and everything else in season. The exhibits were in four classes, comprising cut flowers, plants, floral designs and amateur exhibits. The committee to whom credit is due for the excellent arrangement consisted of John McLaren, S. Clack and Geo. Walters. A very fine lot of roses and carnations from John Young, of Berkeley, and exhibited by F. Pelicano, was much admired but they were not entered for competition.

The finest vase of roses in the exhibit was a bunch of Beauties with six-foot stems and flowers to match shown by Ferrari Bros., and the finest single bunch of carnations was a huge vase of Hannah Hobart, from Sievers & Co. This firm also received first prizes for their exhibit of about 100 varieties of pelargoniums and for the best collection of decorative plants staged for effect. P. C. Meyer, of Burlingame, although young in the business, made some of the older growers stare. He captured the first prize for the largest collection of roses grown under glass and also for the largest assortment of carnations. Mr. Meyer and his foreman, Mr. Breen, deserve great credit for their exhibit, which was one of the finest in the show. Ferrari Bros. have a very good assortment of roses grown under glass and their exhibit of irises in about twelve varieties received first prize. Of outdoor grown roses F. Ludemann had the finest collection, consisting of over 200 varieties. Mr. Ludemann also showed a large assortment of palms, ferns and decorative plants. The finest single fern was a magnificent specimen of Adiantum cuneatum with a three-foot crown shown by H. Plath, who also received first prize for his collection of pansies and his exhibit of ferns. The California Nursery Co., of Niles, had a large and comprehensive showing of hardy outdoor flowers. They received first prize for their exhibit of clematis, consisting of about a dozen varieties, also first prize for peonies and second prizes for their exhibits of shrubbery and field-grown roses.

One of the largest and finest exhibits in the show was that of about 100 varieties of sweet peas grown by C. C. Morse & Co., of Santa Clara. Wm. Kettlewell, gardener to Geo. A. Pope, of Burlingame, captured first prize for largest collection of garden flowers as well as prizes for pansies and pelargoniums. J. W. Bagge exhibited the best collection of coleus and a splendid specimen of staghorn fern. Fick & Faber, the Redwood City Carnation Co. and Henry L. Goertzhain also had good collections of carnations and the Vawter Carnation Co. had the only exhibit of outdoor grown flowers. Thos. Thompson exhibited several blooms of the yellow calla and the Leedham Bulb Co., also of Santa Cruz, had a good showing of late flowering bulbs. W. A. Crocker had a large collection of flowering shrubs and the Golden Gate park exhibited two giant bowls of hardy nymphaeas and a fine assortment of ferns, calceolarias, azaleas and stove plants.

The Market.

Flowers at last are a glut. Carnations can be had at any price. I saw forty dozen Flora Hill sold today for $2 and they were good stock. There is a fair price for fancy sorts but for the usual list it is useless to quote any figures. I do not hear many growers complaining about not being able to sell their roses. Most of this stock is good and will continue so until we have a spell of warm weather. Sweet peas are another drug at present; one almost has to pay the florists for taking them. Coreopsis, gaillardias and bachelor's buttons are handled in large quantities and can be had at any price. Japanese irises are being brought in by a few growers and they are good sellers. They keep well and are splendid for decorative purposes. They cost the florists from $3 to $5 per hundred.

The glut will be over in a couple of weeks, however, and then things will in a measure right themselves again. There has been considerable work for school commencements during the past week, and more to follow, but outside of this there is very little doing. Funeral work has been scarce all around and the only thing we have to console us is that Decoration day is near at hand.

Various Notes.

At the monthly meeting of the California State Floral Society, Rudolph Lichtenberg read an interesting paper on the oils and essences to be found in perfume flowers. He said that in the city of Grasse in France, where the largest perfume factories are to be found, over 3,000,000 pounds of rose leaves yearly are consumed in the making of the various perfumes for the trade, the annual sale from these extracts being over $1,000,000. He further explained that there are ninety-seven factories for the production of the essential oils in the United States, only one of which is situated in California which he considered the one land of all others that should lead in this production.

S. W. Marshall, of Fresno, one of the pioneer nurserymen of the coast, is in town.

The Board of Public Works of Oakland has adopted a resolution whereby all the city gardeners will receive a two weeks' vacation each year without any loss of wages. G.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

There is not much doing in the retail line to enthuse over, in fact it may be said that trade generally is not as active as it was a year ago. Excessive rain in the early season retarded the progress of outdoor work and threw so many out of employment that currency appears to be troubled with poor circulation. Cut flowers of the better grades are still bringing good prices and anything new offered meets with a favorable reception. With stock so plentiful we could easily handle some good decorations, which at this writing are as scarce as Russian naval victories. Pretty Miss Pond Lily has made her debut and as grown here, only in limited quantities, will be deservedly popular for the next six weeks. They retail at $1.50 per dozen. It was only a few years ago that the first plants were brought to the northwest. While flowers are abundant, smilax and asparagus are decidedly scarce, but then we have recourse to the tall timber where is found the beautiful Oregon grape and huckleberry, much used by the florists here in making up large bunches and funeral work. These are preferred by our customers to the common wood fern.

From many inquiries and orders already booked we have reason to expect a big Decoration day trade. From eastern Oregon and Idaho, where the season is late, comes the heaviest demand.

Various Notes.

The plantsmen are through with their rush and satisfied with results. Geraniums and other bedding plants are not so extensively used here as they are in the eastern cities. Everybody has a mania for roses and little protection is needed in our climate. The earlier varieties are already blooming and the middle of June will see them all out in profusion, when our Rose Society expects to give its annual show.

Since Congress has given an appropriation of $500,000 for the Lewis and Clark fair, greater activity is noticed at the fair grounds. Work in every department is being pushed rapidly, but so far the landscaping has received the most attention. George Atton has the contract to furnish and plant 25,000 plants in variety this month, mostly perennials to be transplanted in the fall.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Flowers of every description are very abundant at the present time, the yards are overloaded and the street corners are crowded with petty dealers. People who only grow flowers for a pastime and who have in their yards more flowers than they know what to do with, place them upon the market at whatever they will bring, regardless of the market price, and the result is that very good flowers can be obtained for almost nothing.

Field grown carnations are unusually plentiful and are now selling as low as 50 cents per hundred, wholesale. Centaureas and coreopsis are next in abundance of the cheaper flowers, the former bringing 75 cents and the latter 50 cents per hundred. Ulrich Brunner and Cecil

Brunner roses find a ready market at $2.50 per dozen and the supply scarce. Maman Cochet roses are bringing 75 cents per dozen, with a plentiful supply on the market. Brides and Maids are now selling for $1 per dozen. Sprengeri sprays are 50 cents per hundred and plumosus from 35 to 50 cents per string. Lilies of the valley are now quoted as low as 35 cents per dozen and sweet peas are only bringing $1.50 per thousand.

Business has been quite brisk during the month of May, due principally to the influx of eastern visitors drawn thither by the world's conference of Methodist Episcopal churches, and also the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, both of which last the entire month.

E. J. Vawter, president of the Ocean Park Floral Co., has been donating on an average of 2,000 carnations per day to the conference people for distribution at the convention hall and has thrown open to the public the carnation fields at Ocean Park, which now present a sight much appreciated by our eastern friends, and the opportunity to visit these famous fields has been taken advantage of by a great many.

The demand for floral decorations and funeral work seems to be unusually heavy this month, according to the reports of local florists and the dealers in the country towns are also quite active for this time of the year. R. B. H.

THE PROBLEM OF HELP.

Conditions in California.

In your issue of May 5 a writer undertakes to explain the condition of the labor market in California. I have warned my fellow craftsmen before to the effect that there are not "plenty of good places waiting for first-class men at first-class wages."

The fact of a few growers not being able to get competent, reliable help is a fault which they can lay at their own doors. The majority of growers in California expect to get a working foreman for $2 a day and he board and lodge himself out of that $2. Not only has he a certain amount of responsibility on his shoulders, but he has a day's work to do himself, besides seeing that those under him do a day's work. And after the laborers and day men quit at five or six o'clock he starts to look around and see if everything is in shipshape order for the night and if his stock is ready for shipment; if not he has to be out at four o'clock next morning to make up for somebody's fault. By this time it is probably eight or nine o'clock and poor Mr. Foreman says to himself, "Well I guess I'll quit; I think I have done enough for today. I have been at it steady since 6 o'clock this morning all for $2."

He keeps this up for a month or so and then gets tired out, gets disgusted with everything around him and throws up the job. Another man starts in and it is the same thing over again. And my humble opinion is that such will continue to be the case until such time arrives that the services of gardeners, florists and growers are appreciated and they receive better compensation for their labor than $2 a day, or $50 a month and board themselves.

Another mistake the employer very often makes is that when he has a good man and gets the place in running order, then he gets a notion he can cut down expenses for a few months, and Mr. Cheapjohn comes along with a bundle of references and gets a good man's place at about half the wages. The employer thinks he has made a bargain till, after a few weeks, he finds his place and his stock run down and unsalable. Then he cries out that he can't get good help.

The way to solve the problem in this business is to hire good, reliable men, pay good wages and treat your men as men. By doing so, the youth leaving school with a good education will be induced to enter the field of floriculture.

EMPLOYE.

CALLA, O.—Richard L. Templin and his son, Wilbur W. Templin, will engage in business for themselves at Detroit as a result of the reorganization of the L. Templin & Sons Co.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—It is announced that Herbert Heller and Miss Mary Smith will be married June 1 and will make a wedding tour through the east. The groom is a member of the firm of Heller Bros., proprietors of the South Park Floral Co.

BANGOR, MICH.—M. G. McKee, of the Rose Lawn Greenhouses, died March 6. Mrs. McKee and her young son have conducted the place since, but do not feel able to carry it on, and will sell the greenhouses and what remains of the stock after the spring trade is over.

WASHINGTON.

The condition of the market remains about the same as was reported last week, with the exception of a little stir Wednesday and Thursday, which was confined principally to funeral work.

Planting has begun in the public parks and the beds are beginning to assume their spring-like appearance. All the growers of bedding plants are doing a splendid business. Many things are already sold out. Geraniums are now in great demand, as also are heliotropes and verbenas.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held the first Wednesday in June and it is earnestly requested that all members make a special effort to be present, promptly at eight o'clock.

Captain Ernest had the bowlers out last Wednesday night for practice and some fine scores were made. A good game was rolled between Shaffer and Clark, Shaffer making 222 and Clark 212. Captain Ernest hung up a score of 256 and this will about take the Rathskeller's weekly prize of fifty cigars.

Mr. Green, representing M. Rice & Co., was a recent caller. H. B. L.

In sending a change of advertisement we are pleased to say that our other advertisement in the Review brought us good returns and closed us out of the stock advertised.—Baur Floral Co., Erie, Pa.

Monmouth, Ill.—Thomas Hewitt has been in business here for twenty-eight years and is doing a very fine trade. He now has five greenhouses, two of which were built this season. He has a downtown store under the management of Miss Ann Hewitt.

Paterson, N. J.—Theodor Leonhard states that he is going out of the florists' business. His specialty has been carnations.

BUFFALO.

Various Topics of Interest.

There has been no event of late calling for any special quantity of flowers, but yet a very fair, steady demand, and we are not so much overdone with surplus flowers as is the report from many sister cities. Some real pleasant weather of the last week, all but a little showery, has set everyone thinking of his garden and a very busy time is seen with the market people. There are a great number who must go to market because they can buy cheaper, even if they pay 1 or 2 cents more for a 4-inch geranium than they would at the greenhouse! C. F. Christensen, of Eggertsville, is carting in loads of wonderfully fine zonales and fuchsias and many other plants of the season. Schwert & Bernard, of the Forks, are fast emptying out their usual stock of 25,000 zonale geraniums, and Banner Bros., of Pine Ridge, have crowded houses of bedding plants.

Those are the principal contributors to the market, yet there are lots of others with lesser quantities. We know plants can't be bought cheap on the market from the price these people get for their stock. As we have had occasion to remark before, our people demand a very first class 4-inch geranium and get $1.50 per dozen for them, and other bedding plants, quality and price in proportion. In nearby cities we know of fine geraniums being sold for $1 and even 75 cents per dozen. There can't be a living profit in it, not even if you work your wife, children and mother-in-law.

This has been such a strange and peculiar spring that we hardly know where we are at. As noticed by some other correspondent, all classes of the tulips, the early single, the parrot, the late varieties and the Gesneriana, are all together. Peonies never are in with us for Decoration day and won't be this year for a month. How wonderful to hear that they are abundant in Milwaukee and yet won't be out in Long Island! They must have been watering them with that which made Milwaukee famous, heated to a temperature of 175. That's the correct temperature to scald a pig or extract the saccharine matter from the barley.

Lilac will be just right with us and outside valley will be right on top. If some frames and shaded glass are put over valley beds and they are not too old and crowded it comes about as good as the best inside grown. There will be no trouble to save tulips, if cut and kept cool. So altogether we shall get along and if the weather is such as it is this blessed morning, there will be a big business.

How remarkable that almost from every city, big and little, comes the mournful cry of overproduction and low prices. Carnations, 50 cents to $1; roses, $1 to $3 per 100, and in some cases no price at all. This is the continental plaint with one glorious exception. From glorious old Canada comes the report. Toronto says "business is fine, prices have dropped, yet better grades of roses bring $8 and carnations $3," all of which goes to show how necessary it is for us to have a twenty-five per cent protective tariff to keep the low paid Canucks from swamping our market! Saddle River papers please copy.

We glory in that forty-eight out of fifty targets of James Eadie, of Cleveland. Look out Darby Road and Chestnut street, Chestnut Hill and Dayton, O. It will need the inspiration of the Marguerite's ice box to equal that.

That is a dreadful thing we hear from Lynn, Mass., a burglar under a lady florist's bed, and he escaped! We knew a lady who for many years never failed nightly to look beneath the bed to see if there was a man there, but, alas! there never was, and she gave up her search in disgust.

Buffalo has occupied a conspicuous place in the press of the country for the last week because the great lights of the Presbyterian church of the United States are here in annual general assembly. The union of the north and south church is the most exciting topic before them. Since this venerable body decided in convention a few years ago, in Philadelphia, that babies of thirteen weeks would not be toasted for eternity because they had not joined the church, we have felt much more comfortable for the future existence of our neglected offspring. Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

ENGLISH seedsmen are offering Lilium Harrisii, African grown.

THIS year's turnip seed crop on the Pacific coast is reported a failure.

THE Page Seed Co., Greene, N. Y., will nearly double its facilities before another season.

THE Western Seed and Irrigation Co. is reported as contemplating an early addition to its plant at Fremont, Neb.

SEEDING for onion sets is completed. The early plantings show a fair stand, but the later plantings promise to be the best.

FIELD corn is about cleaned up; $2 to $2.50 per bushel has been paid for Pride of the North, and other good early kinds.

IN a number of recently protested cases the General Appraisers have held that canary seed is not free of duty as grass seed.

VISITED NEW YORK.—Louis Goeppinger, on his annual tour. His firm is now Piegnaux & Lorin, successors to Louis Leroy.

SEED sweet corn is in brisk demand, and where the seller is reasonably sure of his stock the purchaser puts up a good stiff figure for what he needs of it.

AMONG the few displays of seeds from the south is one from the Ullathorne Seed Co., of Memphis, in the Tennessee building at the St. Louis World's Fair.

KNUD GUNDERSTRUP succeeds P. F. Thomsen, who for a number of years has conducted a seed business at Jefferson Park, Ill. The business will be continued along the same lines.

THE Massachusetts legislature, May 23, passed a law forbidding the payment or acceptance of a commission where an employe acts as a purchasing agent, the penalty for so doing being a fine of from $10 to $500.

REPORTS from Louisville, Ky., put the acreage of onion sets this year at somewhat less than a year ago. In places a fairly good stand is reported, while in others the stand is poor and on the whole the season is two weeks behind, with the outlook for a good crop not encouraging.

REPORTS from the pea growing districts of Wisconsin and Michigan are encouraging. As a rule the stand and prospect is equal to last year's at same date. At some of the points well north crops are planted, but not yet up, conditions favorable for quick growth, however.

IT is usual at this time of the year to see plenty of home-grown green stuff on the Chicago market. This year there is nothing so far and it will likely be some time before the market gardeners will realize anything from this year's product. It is needless to say that this has a great deal of effect upon the seedsmen's profits.

SEED TRADE CONVENTION.

The American Seed Trade Association will hold its twenty-second annual convention at the Forest Park University Hotel, St. Louis, June 21 to 23. Secretary Kendel has just issued a very neatly printed program of papers and discussions, as follows:

"Points of Interest for Seedsmen at St. Louis," by H. M. Schisler, of the Schisler-Cornelli Seed Co., St. Louis.

"Points of Interest Pertaining to Seeds and Seed Growing in the State of Washington," by E. F. Bogardus, Lilly, Bogardus & Co., Seattle, Wash.

CORN TO PLANT.

In the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1902, in discussing corn breeding, C. P. Hartley states that butts and tips should be rejected when shelling for seed. Replying to an inquiry Mr. Hartley writes:

Our reasons for recommending that seed ears be nubbed, which signifies the removal of the ill shaped kernels at both ends of the ears, are two-fold. First, the butts of the ears very frequently contain large, misshapen kernels caused, perhaps, by the pressure of the husk at this point, while the tips of the ears often contain misshapen kernels, some of which are frequently very small. If such kernels be included with the seed no corn planter will drop it evenly. This reason in itself is quite sufficient to warrant the discarding of such kernels, as an even stand is of much importance in obtaining a good yield.

Second, we have conducted experiments which have demonstrated that the planting of these small and ill-shaped kernels results in a crop containing a greater per cent of feeble and unproductive stalks. In demonstrating this the kernels from the two extremities of the ears were planted in one patch and in the adjoining patch the well-shaped kernels from the middle portions of the same ears were planted. Counts of the stalks and estimates as to the per cent of feeble and unproductive stalks was much in favor of the patch planted with the well shaped kernels.

These results were perhaps due to the small and weak kernels, which were found to the greatest extent at the apex of the ears. At this part of the ear there are often kernels so very small and poorly developed that if they germinate at all they are sure to produce weak plants.

There have been experiments conducted in Ohio, Kansas and Georgia comparing the kernels from the apecal third, the middle third and the butt third of seed ears. Such experiments have shown for the most part that there is very little difference regarding these portions of the ear.

This, however, is not contradictory to the recommendations given regarding the discarding of the small and poorly shaped kernels at the extremities of the ears. If the parentage of the kernels be identical we believe that the location of the kernels on the cob is a matter of no importance, providing the kernels are equally mature and equally well developed. As the kernels on the butts of the ears are the first to form, it may often happen that the kernels at the tips of the ears are less matured and may be injured by weather conditions that do not so seriously affect the more mature kernels at the butt portions of the ears.

OBITUARY.

Hugh Dickson.

We regret to learn of the death of Mr. Hugh Dickson, of the Royal Nurseries, Belfast, Ireland, on May 5, at the age of 70. Mr. Dickson has been in delicate health for the past twelve months, but continued to attend to his duties to the last. He was in the nurseries, giving some directions to one of his employes, when he fainted without warning. The doctor was summoned, but within five minutes he breathed his last. The cause was pronounced to be heart failure.

Mr. Dickson was an enthusiastic rosarian, and sent his roses to the leading shows, not only in Ireland, but to England and Scotland, where he secured many triumphs. He was also well known to the fraternity. His daintily gotten up rose catalogue for 1903 contained a colored plate of a new hybrid perpetual rose named Hugh Dickson, which is claimed to be the most valuable addition that has been made to the class for many years. The cupped blooms are of a brilliant crimson shaded with scarlet, and open well in all weathers. This will now serve to perpetuate his memory.—Gardening World.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

JAS. M. BURCH, for many years proprietor of the King Nursery, Stanford, Ind., died May 8, of pneumonia after only four days' illness.

THE Great Western Railway has ordered large quantities of evergreens from nurseries in Iowa and will plant them along the right of way as snowbreaks.

THE American Peony Society will hold its annual meeting in connection with the exhibition of the New York Horticultural Society June 8 to 9, at Bronx Park Botanic Garden.

G. H. HUBER, the nursery agent of Petoskey, Mich., has sold seventeen car loads of stock this spring. The principal item is 68,000 peach trees. It has all been planted in northern Michigan.

E. S. WELCH, Shenandoah, Ia., writes: "Our season's business has been up to expectations in most lines and shows a satisfactory increase over last year, besides cleaning up closer. Almost everything being in storage and with our exceptional shipping facilities, side track and electric lighted buildings we were able to handle all shipments promptly in any kind of weather. Our trade on ornamentals continues to improve and we are planting still heavier for the future. Have made our usual large plant in other lines. Trade for next year is promising and prospects are good in this section for a large fruit crop. Our surplus this spring was mostly small grade fruit trees. The shipping season has continued very late on account of the backward spring."

AUGUSTA, GA.

The past season has been a very satisfactory one with the nurserymen and florists in this section. The demand for hardy ornamentals is largely on the increase. The demand for bedding plants has been gradually falling off for several years, as the majority of the people desire hardy shrubs. In this congenial climate we have an immense lot of these plants, and by judicious selections, quantities of bloom can be had from March until November. The demand for bulbs, such as hyacinths, narcissi and tulips, is growing rapidly. The cut flower business is growing, and good stock brings remunerative prices, roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and violets being the leaders in the order named. Palms, fancy-leaved caladiums and grafted oranges are in good demand. Cannas have had their day. All nursery stock is pretty well cleaned up, but many nurserymen were caught late in the season on peaches; there was an over-production and many orders were countermanded; some buyers lost their heads and overbought. This promises to be a great year for the peach orchards in Georgia. This state will break it's record this year. The peach crop is estimated at 3,000 cars; that will mean some lively hustling during June and July.

BUTTED GLASS.

I see a query from a glazier who wants to know how much putty will be required in bedding 12,000 feet of butted glass, 14x16. The answer to this is given in a contemporary at 400 pounds, with some variations according to quality of glass, care in work, etc. Now I really believe, although it is no business of mine, that the honorable professor who answered the question has had no experience with butted glass, else his emphatic reply would have been: "If you intend to butt your glass you do not need an ounce of putty." I don't want to defend butted glass, although there are many large and very successful places which use no other method. I would only wish to say now that I don't like to see any brother florist or beginner so misled. Butted glass laid in putty is a horrible and dismal failure. You are destroying the several principles of merit and advantage which butted glass, when correctly laid, possesses. Banish putty or lap your glass. W. S.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

White Maud Dean.

The advertisements and notices concerning the variety White Maud Dean now appearing in the trade papers, bring to mind the fact that on November 26, 1898, John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, N. Y., exhibited the Chrysanthemum White Maud Dean before the New York committee of the C. S. A. and the variety scored eighty-five points. It was described as a sport from Maud Dean, white with occasional pink shadings, and was granted certificate No. 164.

The white sport from Maud Dean now being offered to the trade may be a variety entirely distinct from the one shown by John Lewis Childs, in 1898, but the new sport has never been placed before a committee of the C. S. A., hence it is impossible to say whether or not they are identical.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Horticultural Society, in monthly session May 19, decided on July 13 and 14 as the days for its annual outing, which this year will take place in Mandeville. Routine business was transacted at the meeting and there was an interesting discussion on various flowers. The exhibit proved the meeting's feature. There were pot plants from E. Valdejo, Abele Bros., Richard Eichling and U. J. Virgin, and cut flowers from J. A. Newsham. The prize for the best plant was awarded to E. Valdejo, whose exhibit was a handsome gloxinia.

In the absence of President Joseph Steckler, Vice-President Eichling presided. Plans for the annual outing were discussed and an appropriation of $2.50 per member was made to defray the expenses of the trip.

A communication from Dan Newsham, in charge of the Louisiana's horticultural exhibition at the World's Fair was read. Mr. Newsham declared Louisiana's exhibit the best at the fair.

Paul Abele, of Abele Bros., who leaves for Europe in a few days, invited the members of the society to be present at his home May 22, when he was the host at a farewell reception.

COLUMBUS, O.—F. C. Wetherby has sold out to Jess Delashmutt.

BABYLON, N. Y.—L. A. Martin is now with A. Wagstaff here. He was until recently with W. H. S. Wood, Greenwich, Conn.

ALVIN, TEX.—The cape jasmine season is on in full force, the crop being the largest in years and the buds extra fine. A great many large orders have been booked for Decoration day and are now mostly on the way. Some dealers pack in market baskets covered with burlap and others use berry crates. One good attribute of the jasmine is that the buds will keep in salable condition for a considerable time if cut at the proper stage.

STERLING, ILL.—Albert Lundstrom, of Oconomowoc, Wis., has purchased the greenhouse plant and business of F. A. Belt. Mr. Lundstrom will take possession June 1. He has had a life long experience in the business and for some time had charge of the John Dupee estate at Oconomowoc. He proposes to considerably add to the Belt establishment and will also force vegetables for the winter market. Mr. Belt, whose health is poor, will remove to Prophetstown, Ill.

PIPING FOR HOT WATER.

I have been heating with steam but want to use hot water. There is one house 22x100, even-span, one gable glass, side walls four feet high, double boarded with building paper between; two benches three feet wide, one on each side and two five and one-half feet wide in the middle. The other house in 15x70, with three benches. The top of the boiler is just below the level of the ground. What piping will be necessary?

F. S. W.

If hot water under pressure is used, the house 22x100 feet, should be provided with a 3-inch riser running under the ridge to the far end of the house and there dividing to supply twelve 2-inch returns arranged under the benches. The highest point in the flow pipe should be at the farthest point from the boiler and the returns under the benches should have a drop of eight to twelve inches in the length of the house. The house 15x70 feet, will require a 2-inch riser under the ridge and eight 2-inch returns arranged under the benches.

Heavy Hail Does Great Damage.

The heaviest hailstorm on record visited this place May 20 and the greenhouse glass was practically all broken, with great damage to the stock below. Most of the glass will be paid for by the Hail Association, but of course there was no insurance on the stock.

At J. O. Zimmerman's the loss is estimated at something like $4,000. About ninety per cent of the 11,000 square feet of glass was broken. The work of the storm was more disastrous on the west and north sides.

The greenhouses owned by Mrs. Ida M. Latshaw suffered to the extent of $1,500. Four whole panes of glass remain out of 2,000 square feet. The stock was almost totally destroyed.

Wallace & McMurray suffered a loss of about $2,000. The area of glass at their houses in East Pueblo, about 5,000 square feet, was wholly destroyed and the stock suffered heavily.

At Fleischer's the hail smashed glass to the amount of 14,000 square feet. The house was filled with pot plants, and all these were practically destroyed. Beyond the woodwork of the greenhouse nothing was left, the ruin being complete.

The greenhouses of J. J. Thomas suffered the same fate as all others in the city. All the glass was broken and the plants were destroyed. The Thatcher greenhouses, as well as other private hothouses, were destroyed, and but little of the stock was saved.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

The Leach Insecticide Co., of Baltimore, sends us a pamphlet containing details with regard to their insecticide and fungicide now being put on the market under the name of Webcide. Formulas are given for the use of the preparation on a large number of insect pests, also fungous diseases, including work in both the garden and greenhouse. The pamphlet also contains letters from a number of men well known in the florist and nursery trades.

The new catalogue of the Dillon Greenhouse Manufacturing Co., Bloomsburg, Pa., shows the ordinary styles of construction, also the company's composition posts and gutter plates and patented sub-watering beds.

NEW PINK CHRYSANTHEMUM

AMERICAN BEAUTY—Certificate C.S.A.

Originated in this country three years ago. It has shown to possess all the qualities required of a first-class commercial Chrysanthemum. Clean, healthy growth, 3½ to 4 feet high, good stem and foliage, every flower coming good under ordinary culture. Form of flower ideal, being closely incurved and high built. Keeping and shipping qualities excellent; color a beautiful dark pink, uniform in every flower. Flowering time November 20th and later. Price 50c each, $5.00 per dozen, $30.00 per hundred. For other varieties ask for list. Cash with order.

ARE YOU GOING TO BUILD?

We offer 1250 running feet of 25 feet wide modern greenhouses, 4½ years old, for $3,000. Have figures to take down and put them up again for $3,000, all complete. If we don't find a buyer for the entire place the houses will be sold separately. We offer this fine place now, the wholesale and the retail places together or separate, with or without the stock, for a ridiculously low price. It is one of Chicago's best money making places. Established 20 years. All newly rebuilt last year. Located in the finest residence district of Chicago, four different car lines passing 100 feet from the boulevard; 2½ blocks to elevated and railroad stations. This place cleared over $100,000 besides itself and the real estate within 10 years. Owner retires by order of his physicians. Come here and investigate everything. If not as we said we will pay all your expenses.

You cannot import stock as good and cheap as we offer NOW.

The Foster Floral Co. of St. Louis, after buying three $100 orders, telegraphed for $2,845 worth, and one day after they got the palms we received a fine letter for good packing and the grand stock, with their check in full. We have many such letters. Send us your trial order.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM MANUAL.

Chrysanthemum growers will find "Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual," by Elmer D. Smith, a very practical and helpful little book.

In its pages every phase of chrysanthemum culture is thoroughly covered in a practical way, the phraseology being so simple and clear that the amateur may profit by it as well as the professional. It is a valuable addition to our trade literature, and the low price of 25 cents (in paper covers) at which it can be supplied postpaid by the REVIEW, brings it within the reach of everyone. The scope of the work is well shown by the titles of the leading chapters, which are: History, Stock Plants, Propagation, Specimen Plants, Packing Plants, Exhibition Blooms, Commercial Flowers, Insects, Diseases, Seedlings and Sports, Preparing Exhibits, Exhibitions, Types, etc. There are eighteen good illustrations.

SHENANDOAH, IA.—Not long since the O. B. Stevens greenhouse property was severely damaged by fire, but they are in good shape again and the business for May has been very satisfactory.

KEROSENE EMULSION.

All soft bodied insects in the greenhouse may be successfully fought with what is known as the kerosene emulsion. It consists of one-half pound hard soap shaved fine, one gallon water and two gallons kerosene. Dissolve the soap in the water, which should be boiling. Remove this from the fire and pour it into the kerosene while still hot. Mix by churning, with a spray pump if you have one at hand, until it changes to a creamy and finally, a soft, butter-like mass. This stock will keep indefinitely. For use add one part of the stock preparation to from ten to thirty times as much water. As many plants will be affected differently by the spray it is best to begin with the weak solution.

PROGRESS IN HORTICULTURE.

I never look over one of these extensive glass-roofed gardens—like Rochford's at Old Turnford—without saying to myself that the demands of Covent Garden and other large markets have led to some of the most remarkable phases of horticultural perfection, both practical and economic, ever seen in British horticulture. We all know the dictum of Adam Smith, who, in writing his celebrated "Wealth of Nations" in 1776, said market gardening was a poor calling because nearly all persons able to purchase garden produce were also able to grow their own supplies. This was probably quite true at the time, but the growth of large towns and manufactures, the increase of population, etc., have altered things, and to-day, not only is there a good open market for edible garden produce grown in England, but for imported fruit, vegetables, and flowers to the annual value of many millions of pounds as well.

One very patent sign of progress nowadays consists in the specialization going on, especially in trade or market gardening. Some, indeed, many, of our best cultivators are specialists in the best sense of the word. It is easier and cheaper to grow a house full of one thing than a house full of many things. One man becomes famous for grapes or peaches, and another for rhubarb and seakale, or asparagus, or even mushrooms; another grower takes up carnations or roses, palms or ferns; and we have even specialists devoted to lily of the valley who can supply flowers of it practically every day in the year. We have tomato, potato, sweet pea, and daffodil specialists, and these men are bound to surpass growers who divide their capital and attention among too many separate things. The word specialist spells progress.—Gardeners' Magazine.

Bucksport, Me.—On the morning of May 12 fire did great damage to the greenhouses of Buckley & Preble. The blaze originated about a temporary heating apparatus. Two carnation houses, one 115 feet long, the other 125, were completely destroyed and a rose house sixty-six feet long was badly burned. To restore the plant will cost $3,500 and in addition there was the loss on stock just at a time when prospects for a profit were brightest. There was insurance to the amount of a few hundred dollars. Property adjoining the greenhouses caught from the fire, so that the blaze was the most disastrous the town has seen in some years.

Covington, Ky.—John Gillespie, a florist, became weary and lay down beside the railroad track. A spark from a passing engine set fire to his clothing and he was seriously burned.

To THE LEACH INSECTICIDE CO.

GENTLEMEN:—We have thoroughly tested your Insecticide on both outdoor and greenhouse stock and found it better and safer than any we have tried so far. Scales of all kinds, even the San Jose and hard shell scales on palms and other greenhouse plants have been eliminated after the second application of your mixture. It affords me pleasure to forward to you this testimonial and inclose an additional order from the Park Department of Baltimore.

Very respectfully, CHAS. L. SEYBOLD, Patterson Park.

Shiocton, Wis., April 5, 1904.
I have given To-BAK-INE a thorough trial and find it a very satisfactory insecticide. So much so that I am using nothing else in my greenhouse since I found out its great merits. I consider it cheaper than any preparation of tobacco that I have any knowledge of, because it does such thorough work that it is not necessary to use it very often.—EBEN E. REXFORD.

TORONTO.

The Market.

During the last week or ten days the weather has been anything but favorable. Frosts at night, cold, wet, dreary days have had the effect of retarding spring growth so much that but little bedding stock has been moved thus far. In this locality it is generally considered that the bulk of the bedding trade is done by June 1, but this year, from present prospects, it will just be nicely commenced.

In the cut flower business, trade has been fairly good, and although the quantity of roses, carnations and other cut flowers was large, yet the demand at most times seemed quite equal to it. The Ontario Jockey Club races have opened and this usually makes quite a demand for the better class of flowers, such as American Beauties, good roses and first quality carnations.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We are now having regular summer weather and when one considers that for four or five days last week the thermometer sank dangerously near the freezing point, it is quite a change. All kinds of flowers have very much of a midsummer aspect. Carnations are smaller and roses of poor quality. Beauties are holding out well. Other red roses are scarce. The supply of other varieties is large but as there is a pretty fair demand the majority of them are sold at some price. The few cold and dark days have cut down the supply of carnations greatly and there are scarcely enough to fill orders. The price has advanced many points also. Sweet peas have been selling very well. Outdoor valley is in and some of it very good; it brings from 50 cents to $2 per hundred. A few new ferns are coming in from the south, but they are still too soft to be of much use.

Various Notes.

The planting season is now on in full force and it is proving to be first class. Many of the growers have as much as they can do taking care of their orders in this department, so they are rather neglecting their cut flowers, which have not been very profitable of late.

The general demand was much better this week than last and with Decoration day but a few days off every one is feeling in a better humor. There is scarcely a doubt but that flowers will be scarce then and prices rule correspondingly high.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Critchell are in the city. Charlie has severed his connection with the Atlanta Floral Co., of Atlanta, Ga., and is at present spending a few days visiting the home folks and his many friends.

Miss Roberts, of Springfield, O., is here to make a study of the retail business. She will presently take the place in a Springfield store recently left vacant by the marriage of Miss Alice Barnes.

Visitors: A. C. Kohlbrand and Mr. Leverly, both of Chicago.

The Florist's Ideal Concrete Greenhouse Bench

IT IS PRACTICAL—Anybody can see that.
IT IS DURABLE—Because it never rots nor rusts.
IT IS STRONG—Because it holds up a man with a loaded wheelbarrow, and that is sufficient.
IT IS ECONOMICAL—Because you will never have to waste time and money for repairs, or put up a new one.
IT IS CLEAN—Because bugs will not cut it up and harbor therein—it is too hard on their teeth.
IT IS NEAT—Because it will never get out of line, warp and twist and will always look more like business.
IT HAS A UNIFORM DRAINAGE—Because it will not drown one end and dry up the other.

THE VACANT CHAIR.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a very handsome vacant chair made for the obsequies of the mayor of Knoxville, Tenn., by C. L. Baum, the artist being Miss Minnie Baum. The piece was three feet eight inches high and broad in proportion. The half-tone shows the material used and the excellent character of the wark.

COLOR HINTS.—II.

Shade and Tint.

In our last talk on color we discussed how to harmonize different colors and combinations of colors. This time we shall attempt to show how a color can find itself. There are two terms to be employed today, which should be well understood at the start. They are "shade" and "tint." By the word shade is meant the darkest, or one of the darker tones of any one color. By the word tint is meant the lightest or one of the lighter tones of the color. To better understand this, get out the color box again. Take, for example, a red. To find a shade of this color, mix it with black, and as you add more black, the red will become fainter, and the result of the mixture will be a darker red each time. These are the shades of the red with which we started. Now start again with a little of the pure red. Dilute it or mix it with white, and as you mix more white the color resulting from the mixture will become lighter and lighter, until finally you get a delicate pink. These light colors are the tints of the red. We see that the red runs all through from the darkest shades to the lightest tints.

In our last study we found that there must be some one color common to two or more flowers in order to make a harmonious combination. The same principle differently applied governs the use of tints and shades. Follow it out, and you will come upon many beautiful and rare combinations, which will make novel and catchy ideas. People will say, "I am tired of pink and white; suggest some other combination." Be able to demonstrate to them that a dark crimson and a delicate pink make a beautiful and artistic combination. The darker the red and the more delicate the pink, the richer and softer is the harmony. To illustrate: Take a cluster of Liberty roses and introduce to the group a few Golden Gates. In all the realm of color you can never find a finer combination. Another illustration of the same principle can be seen in the combination of Maceo and Morning Glory carnations. It is pleasing to the eye because there is a union and an easy blending of the same line of color from the shade to the tint as we see it discover itself.

Adding Intermediate Tones.

After some practice in this line you may introduce an intermediate tone or two, as when in using the Liberty and Golden Gate roses, some of the lighter Bridesmaid roses may be added to the group with good effect, for the coloring in the Bridesmaid rose is one of the tints of the red found in the Liberty.

All so-called white flowers have a tint or a trace of some color. It may be yellow, green, violet, red or blue. Find a rich dark color which to your eye is the shade corresponding to the tint found in this particular flower, and combine the two. Violets and white lilacs in a cluster well illustrate this point. In this combination purple in tint and shade is the one color. A brilliant yellow or orange in such flowers as chrysanthemums, zinnias, marigolds and others which are trying colors in most situations may be correctly used with flowers of a soft creamy white tint. This law of color harmony governs the use in this last combination also. Brilliant and trying magentas and purples are beautiful with very delicate pink and lilac tints; for example, Joost or Lawson carnations with Prosperity. Try in this line of coloring American Beauties and white lilacs together. The more hidden the common or connecting color is, the more delicate and fascinating is the picture. In other words, the darker the shade and the lighter the tint, the finer is the color work.

Among other questions that are apt to occur in this connection is, how many colors is it safe to use together? It is quite a fad nowadays among people who consider themselves qualified to dictate to the public taste to limit the amount of coloring to be used in a cluster or vase of flowers. Some even declare that it is poor taste to use more than one color. But I fail to see the reasonableness of this opinion. Nature blends many colors in one scheme. A flower of a pure, that is, unmixed color, is as rare as a vacuum. Use as many colors as you can blend. This rule will work both ways. If you have at hand two colors between which you can see no connection, don't attempt to combine them. If you have a dozen colors and can thoroughly establish the harmony, use them all, the critics to the contrary notwithstanding. Of course, common sense and the everlasting fitness of things must be given due consideration, but don't be afraid to do and dare what you have seen nobody else do.

To Tone Down Brilliant Color.

Once upon a time we had an order for a large standing cross, to be made solid of dark crimson carnations, for the funeral of an elderly man. Fortune failed us in our efforts to get the right color, and we were compelled to use brilliant rose pink carnations. In order to subdue the holiday appearance of the design a veil of adiantums was thrown over the entire piece. The effect was soft and rich. Such flowers as Stevia serrata, and other fine-cut, spray-like racemes and panicles, are useful for just such finishing touches. Elderberry blossoms and flowers of such nature and appearance are very desirable for this purpose.

How to Proportion Color.

Above all things, avoid using equal quantities of different colors together. Make the proportions as unequal as possible. Have one color very much in excess, another one quite noticeable and others barely suggested. To illustrate this, take up almost any flower at hand. Suppose it is a Bridesmaid rose. You will find pink, yellow, green and possibly faint streaks of red in it, distributed in about this order: Very much pink, blotches of yellow at the base of the petals, relieved by a little green, and betraying the faintest traces of red along the veins here and there. Almost any other flower will follow out a distribution of color similar to this. Some will have fewer colors, but more will have many colors in irregular proportions.

The Use of Yellow.

There is one color common in some form to every flower that has come under my observation. That color is yellow. We are too shy of its use with other colors. Of course any yellow cannot be used everywhere, nor can we find easily yellows in common cultivation which may be used correctly with the other ordinary flowers. To find the yellow which you desire to use with any one flower examine the stamens or pistil found in that flower. With a crimson rose like the Liberty or Meteor there is a soft, subdued, old gold yellow as seen in the floral organs. If you do not find yellow in these parts or in plain sight on the petals or sepals, look down around the base of the petals or in the markings of some obscure part of the flower. Wherever found, the yellow which blends most closely with the flower's own yellow is the best one to combine with it.

Yellow sheds the most light of any color. Therefore, if you wish to brighten a dark corner, use masses of yellow. To have a yellow of any character at night, select a deep color, as artificial l[illegible] pales most yellows.

Much confusion results from different ideas of one color name. Very few people have the same idea of what any one color term means, for instance, scarlet or crimson. About the simplest and easiest way to convey color meaning is to describe a color by a variety of plant or flower well known to the trade, as, for example, everybody who knows the Crane carnation, or America, can get a good conception of what scarlet is, and can see crimson most easily by looking at a Liberty or Meteor rose. Be careful never to confuse these two reds. Scarlet and pink, however, delicate, must never be used together, but crimson and pink, as referred to above, make an excellent combination. There are variations and combinations which by and by your eye will refuse, and gradually your sense of color will develop, and combinations in which you formerly could see no fault will begin to be offensive, while new creations of color will continually occur to you. In all, you will find it a most fascinating and profitable study. Gertrude Blair.

THE BEDDING PLANT TRADE.

The season for spring bedding ordinarily closes with Memorial day, but the lateness of spring has this year retarded outdoor work to such an extent that in many sections it has little more than begun and everywhere considerable work yet remains to be done. Reports from all over the country are unanimous in saying that the season has been one of the best on record; larger quantities of stock are being used than ever before and at prices at which there can be little complaint. There is, of course, poor sale for rank and scraggly geraniums, but well-grown stock of the better bedding varieties is moving rapidly everywhere. Although the cry has often been made that the vinca is being used too universally and that something should be offered for variety, yet the people still want the vinca, as is attested by the fact that stocks of it were quickly cleaned up in most places, and those who have a surplus are finding a very ready market through the medium of the advertising columns of the Review. Pansies have sold finely too and there is a sale for every surplus lot. Although the season is not yet at its end, there are many sections of the country in which some, or several, items of necessary stock are already exhausted. Those who have worked up such large supplies that they may feel some doubt as to their ability to retail all their stock, should take advantage of the opportunity to find a buyer for their surplus before the season is too far advanced. Advertising in the Review will find a buyer for all kinds of good stock offered at a reasonable price.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Decoration Day.

This is Decoration day and others are doing the work. The earth, the trees and the little carnation plants, recently put into the field are being decorated and refreshed by a gentle rain. Perhaps it is only local. We hope so, for welcome as is this warm rain it will disappoint millions who looked forward to the day and make a damp march for the fast dwindling ranks of the heroes of Gettysburg and Antietam.

We have been cutting a fine lot of lilac blooms from young bushes three to five feet high; that is their pruning. And besides the lilac there are the snowballs. Pyrus Japonica, forsythea and African tamarix will soon be out of flower and if you have large bushes and want to keep them from occupying more space now is the time to shorten back the growths that bore the flowers. In the case of the tamarix cut them right down as you would a willow. The strong growth they quickly make is most ornamental. If not cut down they soon become bare, straggling, unsightly bushes.

Begonias.

The very important winter plant, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, will soon be needing close attention. Those plants propagated from leaves last winter, as well as the plants that you reserved for stock, will begin to grow actively the coming month. Little plants with two or three shoots will make very large plants for next winter. Old plants sending up young growths will give you cuttings that, if propagated, will make most useful plants. This beautiful begonia, as is well known, is a true hybrid. It is a cross between two species. If not a direct cross between two species, then varieties of two species, and that is why it is peculiar and difficult to manage. It does not enjoy our hot summer, as is proved by its making its most rapid and vigorous growth after the middle of September on to New Year's.

With the exception of the Rex begonias, to propagate which by the leaf it is necessary, in the fall months, to have a good bottom heat in the sand, all the begonias root well in the summer months without any fire heat. Keep them shaded during the day and moderately moist in the sand and Gloire de Lorraine and all the other begonias will root freely.

This is an opportune moment to speak of the condition of the propagating bed, for it is by no means out of use just now. When the chrysanthemum renaissance began some fifteen years ago we thought it necessary, in propagating them in June or July, and for which there are several uses, that we must put up a mild hot-bed in which to strike them. We did not know then that the chrysanthemum, as well as the poinsettia, would root in the sand in the propagating bench as well, if not as quickly, in July as in March, if you only keep them soaked and shaded from bright sunshine. By soaked I mean a thorough watering of the sand morning and evening on every warm, bright day and every morning whatever the weather.

To return to the begonias, not only is this a time to begin active work on the Lorraine, but on the many species and varieties which can be almost called shrubby. Metallica we will take as a type and the varieties and forms are now without number. They are not a very important class of plants, either as cut flowers or as a florists' pot plant and yet in private greenhouses or as a window plant there is no genus of plants that surpasses them for continued beauty and interest. I have never discovered that the begonia was particular about soil, yet if I were catering to Gloire de Lorraine I should choose a fresh, rather light loam with one-fifth of well rotted stable manure, one-fifth leaf-mold to three-fifths of the loam. Begonias are all natives of a tropical or sub-tropical clime, where the bright sun shines on them. So don't subject them to a dense shade while they are occupying but a limited space on the bench. Shade them when necessary but morning, evening and on dull days give them unobstructed daylight.

The Problem of Bench Material.

I feel sure there are at least a thousand florists in the country who are, or will be in a few days, worrying over the question of new benches or beds for their carnations and roses, as well as repairing the benches that are used for plants. We can dismiss the plant benches quickly by simply saying that for all our small plants, our bedding plants and our Easter plants there is nothing so convenient as the bench some two feet above the ground. Of what to construct these benches is of great importance. I am confident that a coming generation will look back at us and smile and pity us for building benches of quick-rotting wood that had to be renewed every three or four years. The benches of the future will be of iron and tile or cement.

A Survey of the Past.

This is such a large subject that one scarcely knows where to begin. To be reminiscent a moment, many of us can remember when the only roses to be had in winter were Lamarque, Marechal Niel or beautiful old Solfaterre. Then Safrano, Isabella Sprunt and a few other tea roses began to be grown in pots. Then came planting them on beds of a foot or more of soil. Next some genius discovered that a bench that sloped to the south about the same pitch as the roof, or about eighteen inches in six feet, was the correct thing. Then John N. May and other good thinkers found that four inches of soil was all that was necessary to produce the finest roses, and the great majority of rose and carnation growers have not made any radical change from the shallow raised bench for a number of years. Where the house is a detached three-quarter-span some twenty feet wide you could not very well have any other system than the raised bench.

I have briefly reviewed the evolution and changes that have taken place in thirty years in a most important part of our business merely to attempt to show that progress and change may be ahead of us, as we have emerged from it. Evolution, progress and improvement must and do go on in all spheres of life and industry, theology included.

So in building benches for roses or carnations, it is a question whether it is wise to put up too costly a structure, for if you are anywise of a progressive kind you may in two years be altering your methods and adopting a style of bench that you saw over at "old Bill Jones', who had some gol darn fine stuff." Leaving these soil benches for a moment, we must admit that for our ordinary class of plants in pots there has been no change in style of bench.

No Pipes Overhead.

I don't want to drag in that momentous question of heating in these notes, but I will say that under benches devoted to pot plants, particularly soft-wooded plants, it is of the greatest benefit to have two or three pipes, either hot water or steam. The man who advocates any hot water or steam pipes above the plants or near the ridge pole is suffering from paresis. The very best rose grower the writer has ever known, although only growing five or six houses, told me, while looking around at his wonderful Bridesmaids, that he would not have any pipes beneath his benches. He would consider it a real detriment, and I most cordially agree with him. The temperature of the soil is that of the atmosphere and that is enough. Remember you are not forcing these roses and carnations, you are simply partially reversing their season of blooming. We truly force lily of the valley, tulips, seakale and rhubarb, known in the western hemisphere as pie plant, but we don't force these roses and carnations that are a staple of our industry.

Phalaenopsis Amabilis Grown by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

Bottom Heat Often a Benefit.

Pipes beneath the bench are not an absolute essential but many of our succulent plants, such as geraniums and begonias, are greatly benefited by a little warmth from the boards. It is not so much heat that is good to them as dryness. More especially is this the case in the spring, when little fire is needed and yet some is wanted to keep out the dampness. With the exception of palms and some few other large plants, I see no likely change from the ordinary bench that is, and has been, used for many years and if you are sure that you will never convert this or that house into any other use than growing plants in pots, then it will pay you splendid interest to build a bench that will last as long as you will last, or your son-in-law included.

An Ideal Bench.

First cost is, of course, the great consideration. Something cheap that will last a few years "till I can afford to build better" is the excuse. The neatest, most substantial and consequently the most durable bench I have lately seen was at George Urban's, at Pine Ridge, N. Y. Cost was of no great consideration, but you will generally notice that wealthy men are continually encouraging and making money by buying at wholesale, building substantially and looking into the future. This bench had for legs 4-inch vitrified sewer pipe, resting on a brick or flat stone. The pipe, socket up, was filled with a cheap concrete, four parts of sifted ashes to one of cement. On the tile rested a tee iron, running lengthwise of the bench and on the iron were tiles 24x18. The tile was about one and a half inches thick. To make the bench a complete success there was an edge of concrete two inches thick at the bench, tapering to one inch. Now there is a bench which will outlast the roof and it is not so costly after all. If there is a tileyard in your neighborhood you will find that they are very pleased to make any pattern of tile or hollow brick that you desire, only give them the pattern.

Cypress the Best Wood.

After all, there will be more wooden benches built and repaired than others, and what are you going to use for material? White pine that once covered the great state of Michigan, is now prohibitive in price and quickly decays. Hemlock that once clothed the slopes of our Alleghany mountains, is like the American bison, fast disappearing from the face of the earth, and a few men own the good timber now standing and, with the help of a high tariff known as "protection to American labor," these few individuals have jumped the price of hemlock within six years from $10 to $19 per 1,000 feet. I have yet to learn that the man who chopped the tree or sawed it into boards has received a proportionate increase in wages. Perhaps his house rent and flour and coal have gone up. So the poor fellow thinks we are having prosperous times. Canada has plenty of pine and tamarix, the American larch, which is a grand article for our purpose, closely resembling our southern cypress. Both are deciduous conifers.

Cypress is a great boon to we florists. It seems indestructible except by fire. Our greenhouse structural firms, of which there are now many, all seem to be conscientious, good people and send out only pure and unadulterated quality. You get ridge and plate sixteen feet long with not the sign of a knot. Now there must be any amount of second quality stuff in cutting up these logs that can be bought as cheaply as our fast rotting white pine or hemlock, and the cypress will outlast the former seven times. You will notice in your benches, when repairing, that it is where the plank or board lay on your crosspiece or joist that the rotting took place. Of all processes to rot wood, our use of it as benches is the most successful.

I have proved that a heavy coating of new board with hydraulic cement will add two or three years to the use of the soft hemlock or pine. This costs comparatively nothing. Just mix the pure cement in a pail with enough water so that it can be spread or smeared over the boards with a brush. Where wood lies on wood is where the decay begins, and ends with a board falling down and taking down with it a dozen carnations or twenty 4-inch geraniums. With this cement, plaster the top of the crosspiece, the 2x6 that is to support your boards, and be sure to put a heavy lot of cement on the underside of the board where it lies on the crosspiece.

Beds Versus Benches.

Next week, if I am spared, as devout people of the last century used to say, I want to illuminate some ideas that are revolving in my coco anent benches versus beds on the ground, etc. The great majority of houses built for the past twenty-five years, up to within two or three years ago, were not intended, nor can they be used, with beds near the ground surface, but nowadays immense ranges of glass are erected especially designed for these low beds, and depend upon it, that is the system that is coming to stay.

In conclusion, if you have to use wooden benches, buy cypress. Noah's Ark was made of cypress and a piece of it can still be seen at the foot of Mt. Ararat. It is a piece of the partition that separated the giraffe from the skunk and the giraffe's curiosity to know where the odor came from was the cause of his neck growing so long.

William Scott.

Mt. Carmel, Ill.—The greenhouses and business of the Mt. Carmel Floral Co. have been sold to Jacob Knupp, of Colera, Ala., consideration $4,000.

THE WEILAND ESTABLISHMENT.

Few young men have had a fairer start in the trade than has been the good fortune of Peter Weiland, son of M. Weiland, of Evanston, Ill., and nephew of Peter Reinberg, with whom he has until recently been in partnership at the plant at New Castle, Ind. Mr. Weiland was 27 years of age only last Saturday and yesterday came into full control of the greenhouses shown in the accompanying illustrations, the deal for the purchase having been made last fall. To sell the product, which has heretofore gone to Chicago, Mr. Weiland has opened a wholesale store at 128 East Third street in Cincinnati, where it is his aim to do a shipping business. He has ten houses, 30x300, covering a space of 90,000 square feet. The space is now all in roses, except some benches of asparagus and sweet peas, but next season there will be two houses of carnations and two benches of smilax and asparagus, leaving seven and one-half houses for roses, principally Beauties, Brides and Maids. As shown in one of the accompanying illustrations, there is a big field of peonies on the place, about 4,000 plants, which will give a big cut this month.

One of Peter Weiland's Houses of Young Beauties at New Castle, Ind.

TEMPERATURE FOR CARNATIONS.

I have three connected houses, 30x75 feet, the grade of the land being a sharp slope. As there are no partition walls, the upper house runs 8 to 10 degrees warmer than the lower one. I expect to grow Lawson, Lord, Crocker, Joost, Harlowarden, Adonis, Crane, Hill and Queen Louise. At least these are the kinds I have propagated and planted in the field. And I want to try some of the new ones on a small scale, as I never want to be behind the other fellows. I have solid beds and would like to know what varieties to plant on the cold side and on the warm side. H. G. F.

I believe the best thing you can do is to put some kind of a partition between either the two lower houses or between the upper two. The difference in the temperature between the lower and the upper houses is too great. If you keep the coldest house up to 48 to 50 degrees it would run the warmest house up close to 60 degrees, which is too warm for any carnation I know of. By having only two connected there would be a difference of perhaps 6 degrees, which would be all right. The separate house you could then keep at whatever temperature you wished. In deciding where to put the partition, you should bear in mind where you will add on when you build some more. If you expect to add on at the upper side, I would have the lower two open, or the reverse in case you will add at the bottom.

The varieties you name will need about the following temperatures, and you will have no trouble in planting them in the temperatures they want: Lawson and Crocker, 56 degrees; Mrs. Joost and Flora Hill, 54; the others, 50 to 52, with Adonis and Queen Louise at the warmer end. A. F. J. Baur.

ROSES.

Culture for Meteor.

That red roses still command a ready and profitable market is evidenced by the many efforts to grow that erratic favorite, Liberty. That this gem can be grown profitably is an established fact, as several growers have during the past season apparently solved the problem. Many growers of good repute, however, have failed in getting profitable returns from this variety, and are hunting for some reliable red rose that can be grown in Bridesmaid temperature. A good red that will succeed under these conditions will fill a long felt want.

The new rose, General MacArthur, which is now being put on the market, is recommended to fill just such a want, but as the price is rather steep for the ordinary grower and the risks too great to warrant large plantations this year, the majority of us will still have to depend on Meteor for our red crops for at least the coming season. The greatest drawback to this rose as felt by the smaller growers is that it requires for its successful culture conditions peculiar to itself, which cannot be obtained in a house where other roses are grown. Requiring a much higher temperature than other standard sorts, and more moisture, both in the atmosphere and at the roots, to obtain the best results a house must be entirely devoted to it.

Planting early to give it the full benefit of the growing season is also advantageous, so that by the time for beginning to take the crop the plants may be large and stocky. If it is well handled during the winter every shoot will produce a bloom and the cutting of these will prevent the plant from increasing very much in size during these months.

As they require copious supplies of water during the growing season and, indeed, at all times requiring more water than the ordinary rose crops, extra drainage ought to be provided. More frequent cultivation will also be necessary to keep the surface of the soil open and porous. Spider being one of its most persistent enemies, careful watching will be absolutely necessary to secure success, as the higher temperature to which it is exposed is very conducive to the rapid reproduction of these pests. The peculiar hump-backed shape of the mature leaves makes it difficult to reach the under sides of these and renders watchfulness all the more necessary, for if spider once secures a good foothold in a Meteor house the work of eradicating it, or even keeping it in subjection, is harder and more exacting than that demanded by any other variety.

The minimum temperature to which this rose can be exposed without retarding or injuring it during the growing season is about 62 degrees and if there is any danger of the temperature falling below this firing should be resorted to at once. The maximum during sunshine can approach the 100 degree mark, if there is sufficient moisture in the house.

In order to secure plenty of flower bearing buds disbudding will have to be strictly attended to. This, as practiced by the best growers of this variety, consists in cutting off the bud with about the half of the flower stem attached, leaving not more than three or four well developed leaves on the stem, every bud from which will under ordinary cultural rules develop into a flower bearing stem. RIBES.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Cuttings.

Plants intended to produce late flowers may still be propagated, though it is not so easy to strike them now that the weather is warm. One must be careful to see that the cuttings are well shaded and the ventilators rather close, for a drying wind is as bad as, or worse than sunlight. The cuttings must be kept from wilting by being frequently sprayed and copiously watered. If they are allowed to get dry and hard they may as well be thrown out for they will never root well enough to make satisfactory plants. Just as soon as the roots are pushing out pot them up and shade heavily for a day or two and they will soon establish themselves.

Plants that are set out on the benches should be looked over carefully and the fly killed that as a rule infests the tips of the growing shoots at this season. A heavy dusting of tobacco dust or spraying with tobacco water will clean them out. I have found that if the plants are entirely freed from fly shortly after planting they will often run clean all summer. The lady bug, well known to practically everybody, is the best aid a man can have in keeping down the fly.

Many of the plants propagated in February are now showing a bud. Rub this off and when the side shoots have become sufficiently long to enable you to see which will be the best, pinch off everything except the shoot you wish to retain to grow along. It is not wise to be in too much of a hurry in taking off the superfluous shoots, as it sometimes happens that some of the growths get one inch or so long and then throw another bud. Occasionally all the growths do this, and in that case there is nothing to be done except cut the plant down to within five or six leaves of the ground and let it break out again. Ordinarily, however, the plants are not troublesome in this way, but come away clean and right with a new shoot.

If the soil in the bench does not feel firm and solid run over it again with a brick. There is more in this firming of the soil for chrysanthemums than the average grower thinks. It makes a much slower, firmer and better growth of the plants.

Look out for your pot plants, if you grow any. The ones intended for 6-inch pots should be moved up from the 2-inch just as soon as they are rooted enough. It is not wise to let plants stay in small pots any longer than is necessary, as they dry out so quickly and are very liable to get hard and stunted. Plants for specimens should be kept pinched closely, so that they will produce all the shoots possible. Pot them on as they need it, so that they may have all the show possible. Do things on time, and keep doing them on time, is the watchword of the successful grower. BRIAN BORU.

JUDGING A MUM SHOW.

In a recent issue we asked about the standard method of grading chrysanthemums, but as Mr. Boru did not catch our meaning we will try to be more explicit. The idea is that we are selected to judge a mum show this fall and want the standard rules of grading the flower, plant, form, etc., the same that are used in the shows in the large cities. Anything pertaining to classing and handling the plants in the show would be very interesting. G. N. Co.

The scale of points as adopted by the Chrysanthemum Society of America, which is printed below, forms the best guide for a judge to follow. As a judge the correspondent should have nothing whatever to do with classing or handling the plants. The schedule is gotten up by the society or parties having the exhibition in charge and they are supposed to classify and arrange every exhibit in its proper place. Then when every detail is complete, every exhibit staged, the hall is cleared of every one, interested or otherwise, and the judges are turned in, with minds unbiased and in total ignorance of the ownership of anything on which they have to pass judgment.

That is the proper way to do things, but I only know of about two societies that do things that way. Generally the judges will be found judging one class while the exhibitors are frantically setting up another, and before things are finished the general public is coming in, making confusion worse confounded. It has been the writer's fortune or misfortune to help judge on some occasions, and it is at best a thankless task. The kicker is always in evidence at a flower show and all sorts of charges and insinuations are hurled at the heads of the poor judges. I doubt if any fairminded man ever rendered anything but an honorable decision and tried to be strictly honest in his verdict, but the promoters of a show owe it to the judges to have the hall cleared, have all cards enclosed in numbered envelopes and place the judges in a position where they would be like Cæsar's wife, "above suspicion."

The scale follows. So far as its interpretation is concerned, the correspondent will have to travel alone and pray for himself.

SOIL STERILIZATION.

We print below some extracts from an interesting lecture on this subject delivered before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society by Prof. G. E. Stone, of the Hatch Experiment Station, Amherst, Mass.

The treatment of soil by heat, or sterilization as it is called, has been carried on at the Hatch Experiment Station, Amherst, for some years in connection with troublesome organisms which thrive in the soil and prevent the production of healthy crops. It should be borne in mind, however, that when we speak of sterilization of the soil we do not mean absolute sterilization, but what we actually accomplish is a sort of Pasteurization or partial sterilization; in other words, our soil is sterilized so far as the presence of some obnoxious organism is concerned. Cultures of soil treated with steam which attained a temperature of 212 degrees F. would show a considerable bacterial flora, and the subsequent and continual exposure of the soil to the air and the application of water will enable the soil to become subsequently supplied with a host of organisms which are beneficial, indifferent or otherwise. In order to obtain absolute sterilization and maintain those conditions we would have to make use of the methods employed by bacteriologists. Absolute sterilization we do not desire; and all that it is necessary to accomplish is to destroy the obnoxious pests which cause damage to the crop. A uniform temperature of 180 degrees F. maintained for a short time would accomplish this, but in practice it is far better to exceed this temperature in order to be on the safe side.

The heating by steam is now done largely by the aid of perforated pipes and in some cases use is made of two-inch porous tile, although this method is not so practicable. If finely perforated tile could be obtained in the market at a reasonable cost their use would be of much more value for this purpose than at present. The various contrivances made out of perforated pipe varying from one inch to three inches in diameter and usually placed from seven to twelve inches apart are made up into frames from ten to twenty feet or more in length and into any desired width. The size and number of the perforations vary much in different appliances. Where they are rather large (one-fourth inch) they are frequently covered with burlap. In some appliances the perforations are one-fourth inch in diameter and are only one and one-half inches apart each way; in others the perforations may be only one-eighth inch in diameter and from three to six inches apart with two or three rows of such holes extending along the pipe. Some of these appliances are not made up into permanent frames but are in sections easily put together or taken apart and are so constructed that they can be readily extended to any length or width desired. These forms are provided with headers placed transversely which are pipes of larger diameter containing perforations, and nipples are inserted at intervals which readily fit into the extension pipes. In some instances the headers are placed at each end, thus forming with the extension pipes a frame composed of a series of rectangles. In this form a complete circulation of steam can take place through the apparatus. In others the headers are in the middle and the extension pipes lead off into opposite directions. In the latter case the ends of the extension pipes are plugged with wood and no circulation of steam takes place.

The methods generally adopted by lettuce growers in heating their soil is to place the sterilizer on the surface of the bed. If the bed is twenty feet wide then it would be most convenient to have the sterilizer ten feet wide and twenty or thirty feet long. This is placed midway in the bed and the soil to the depth of one foot or more is dug up on either side and thrown on top of the sterilizer. The steam is then turned on and the soil heated. After sufficient steaming has taken place the pipes can be pulled out and made ready for the next treatment. The soil previously treated is covered up with old canvass and allowed to stand some hours, after which the top portion is shoveled back to where it was taken from. Not only is the one foot or fifteen inches of top soil heated by this method, but the soil underneath the apparatus is equally well sterilized, providing too much haste is not made in removing the treated soil.

Mr. W. W. Rawson claims that it cost him $50 to sterilize a house three hundred by forty feet which would be at the rate of about $4.16 per one thousand cubic feet. This is undoubtedly a very fair estimate of what it costs to sterilize soil when undertaken on a large plan.

Mr. Sargent maintains that two men can sterilize a house one hundred and sixty by forty-five feet with his apparatus in three days. Assuming that it will take forty-two cents worth of coal to heat one thousand cubic feet of soil together with the labor required in setting up the apparatus it would cost about $1.66 to sterilize one thousand cubic feet. This is assuming that the boiler is already in operation for heating the houses and a fireman is employed to run it. It should be understood that there is no shoveling of the soil required with the use of this sterilizer, hence we should expect a saving of expense. When soil can be sterilized at $2.00 per one thousand cubic feet or even at $5.00 there is no longer any question concerning the practical application of this method in greenhouses for the extermination of some of its worst enemies which interfere with the production of healthy and profitable crops. Even where the cumbersome tile method is employed, the cost of sterilization is less than one-half what it costs to remove the old soil from a house and supply it with new.

It is not possible for us to give an adequate estimate in dollars and cents as to the amount of money that has been saved by the practice of sterilization, as we do not know the amount of loss experienced by floriculturists and market gardeners in this state due to infested soils. The value of any method of treatment will not be considered for one year alone but for a period of years in order to obtain an idea of its full significance. As a rule lettuce growers have suffered a loss of from fifteen to fifty per cent from the "drop" alone and in some instances even greater losses have taken place. There are, however, other beneficial results derived from the practice of sterilization other than those of ridding the soil of disease producing germs. Some market gardeners have practiced sterilization for three years, not wholly for the sole purpose of ridding the soil of certain disease producing organisms, as that can be accomplished by one treatment when properly done, but largely for the purpose of increasing their crops. We have made many experiments with various crops in which the growth of plants in sterilized soil was compared with the growth of the same species of plants in precisely similar earth not sterilized. The effect of sterilization is quite marked in such experiments.

For the purpose of determining on a larger scale than we had heretofore shown the effect heating the soil had upon the acceleration of a crop of lettuce we grew a crop from the seed to maturity in sterilized and unsterilized soil. The results showed a gain of thirty-three per cent in weight in favor of the sterilized plats. Plants grown in sterilized soil are always lighter colored, more tender and it is not a difficult task for an expert to pick out such plants in the market. Neither is it difficult to ascertain from market specimens what temperatures lettuce crops have generally been subject to. In houses where the soil has been treated twice the difference in the color of plants is very marked indeed showing that the prolonged heating of the soil is much more favorable to the growth of the plant than a brief period of heating.

There was two and two-tenths per cent more water in those plants grown in treated soil than in the untreated as well as a corresponding decrease in the unburned residue representing organic matter, ash constituents, etc. From the color and texture of the lettuce grown in sterilized soil this might be expected.

A BIG BLAZE.

Under the above heading and with the sub-head "Elwell's Greenhouse on Fire," the following appeared in the Sioux Falls Leader for May 14:

"Fire Chief McKeever was called to Elwell's greenhouse, 1015 S. Main, which he found ablaze with scarlet geranium blossoms. Water was of no avail, as it only increased the ruddy glow; so the chief decided to reduce the fiery aspect by ordering a quantity of plants for bedding purposes, and declared that it was the only blaze in the city that he had failed to extinguish. The greenhouse contains an excellent stock of the best kinds of plants for beds and window boxes and is quite worth a visit."

A Single Shipment of Palms from the Albert Fuchs Place, Chicago.

A PALM SHIPMENT.

The accompanying illustration is a reproduction from a photograph of a shipment of palms recently sent by Albert Fuchs, Chicago, to the Foster Floral Co., St. Louis. The plants were all of good size and a furniture car, double decked, was required to hold this single order. Both decks were covered with a deep layer of shavings to receive the plants and they arrived without a pot broken.

HYDROCYANIC FUMIGATION.

Method of Making the Gas.

"The materials required in fumigating with hydrocyanic acid gas are ninety-eight per cent cyanide of potassium, broken in small lumps, best secured in ten or twenty-five pound cans at 30 to 40 cents a pound, and commercial sulphuric acid at 3 to 4 cents a pound by the carboy.

"For an ordinary house or frame, good vessels for liberating the gas are one and a half or two-gallon earthen jars of as small diameter as possible, so as to insure the immersion of the cyanide of potassium when it is dropped into the acid. One jar should be used to about every twenty-five feet in length of greenhouses of ordinary width, in order that the gas may be quickly distributed when set free. When the jars are placed in position the next step is to arrange to lower the paper bags containing the desired amount of cyanide into the jars, from the outside. This is best done by passing a cord through a hook or screw-eye attached to the roof over each jar in such a manner that when the string or strings are loosened from the outside the bags of cyanide will be lowered into their respective jars.

"When the strings are ready and the quantity of chemicals determined, divide the amount of cyanide to be used into parts corresponding to the number of jars. Wrap each part up in a single thickness of ordinary newspaper and put in ordinary brown paper bags, and attach the bags to the strings. While the jars are empty test the arrangement to see if it works satisfactorily. After each bag is suspended in place, the other end of the string securely fastened where it can be reached from the outside and the arrangement tested, move the suspended bags to one side so they will be out of the way while putting the water and acid in the jars. When this is done, pour into each jar an amount of water about equal to the bulk of the potassium cyanide in the bag. Eight ounces of cyanide will require about a half a pint of water. The sulphuric acid should then be poured in until steam rises from the water. This would require for a pint of water about a pint and a half of acid. It is not necessary, however, to measure the acid, as the evolution of steam indicates when the right amount has been poured in. Always put the water in first and then pour in the acid. As soon as this is done place the bags over their respective jars. When all is ready go out, close the door and carefully loosen the strings, allowing the bags to settle into the acid.

"While the method just described is desirable for a large house or series of houses from which exit would be difficult after dark it is not necessary to go to the trouble of lowering the cyanide into the acid by strings in most cases. When the jars containing the water and acid are properly placed the cyanide in the paper sacks, as previously described, may be set beside the jars; then the operator, starting in one end of the house, may carefully drop the bag into the water and acid, coming out the other end of the house. If there are two sets of jars in different paths it will be necessary for two operators to start, one in each path, working in the same direction, at about the same rate of speed. In this way the cyanide can be placed very quickly and easily in quite a large series of jars, taking care that no cyanide is placed in a jar in such a way as to cut off the exit of any operator from the house.

"This method of hand dropping is now the one most largely used. The gas will very soon be given off and fill every portion of the house. It is colorless and smells and tastes like peach pits. A little of it is harmless, but too much will cause death. A small quantity will leak out of the house; avoid positions where it can be smelled. The time of exposure should be reckoned from the lowering of the cyanide into the jars. When the proper time has elapsed, varying for different plants, quickly open the ventilators from the outside, so that the gas can escape as rapidly as possible. It will all be gone from a large house in half or three-quarters of an hour, and the ventilators may then be closed if necessary. Next morning the material left in the jars should be emptied into a hole and buried."

BOSTON.

The Market.

We experienced the first genuine warm wave of the season during the past week, temperatures ranging from 85 to 87 degrees from May 24 to 27. Cooler conditions prevailed for the great Decoration day market on Saturday, the air being crisp and cool, fine weather lasting over the holiday itself. During the early part of the week the hot weather caused a heavy glut in the market, but a perceptible shortening was noticeable by Thursday, growers holding back their stock. Most of the florists have a very heavy local trade to supply for Memorial day and consequently bring less than their usual supplies into the market, which causes prices to harden.

The general opinion among wholesalers and retailers appears to be that Decoration day trade was equal to any past year's record in most respects and superior in some. A little more outdoor material was available than a year ago, but this seemed to have no effect on prices of greenhouse stock. Roses were quite plentiful but cleared out easily, colored varieties as usual selling best. There was no decided advance in prices; $12 to $20 seemed to be the ruling price on Beauties. Brides and Bridesmaids made from $4 to $12, a few extra fine ones going above these prices. Liberty, Meteor and hybrids were scarce and eagerly snapped up at advanced prices. The output of carnations, while very large, was less than had been expected, many being held back for local trade; $3 to $3.50 per hundred seemed to be the ruling price for good average stock, some selling at $4 and fancies $5. Crimson and scarlet varieties were in strongest demand.

There was a big output of feverfew, stocks and white candytuft, which sold generally at 50 cents per bunch. Antirrhinums and spiræas were fairly plentiful and sweet peas went at from 25 to 50 cents per hundred. Very little bulbous stock appeared except a few Narcissus poeticus and some of the late flowering tulips. Outdoor lily of the valley was extra fine, selling at $1 to $2 per hundred. Callas, Lilium longiflorum and L. candidum, Gladiolus The Bride and Gandavensis hybrids, Iris Germanica in variety (the variety Mme. Chereau being the best seller), lilacs and Spanish iris comprised the bulk of the remaining stock sold. Retailers used flowers of gloxinias, zonale and fancy pelargoniums, hydrangeas, loniceras, viburnums, hardy azaleas, native cypripediums and in fact about everything procurable to help fill their numerous orders. The wholesalers were very busy and did an enormous trade, having to hire considerable additional floor space. While Friday and Saturday were their busiest days, they were quite active on Monday morning, the wholesale market cleaning out well on that day. A great many artificial wreaths and bouquets were disposed of and, taken all in all, the Memorial day trade of 1904 was an eminently satisfactory one.

Business during June will be materially assisted by the numerous weddings and class day gatherings. As many growers also start to pull out their roses and carnations after Memorial day, this further restricts the output and prevents a glut.

Peonies, except officinalis, are never in season for our Memorial day trade, but some fine single pyrethrums, Oriental poppies and other perennials were noticed. One florist made a great strike with a house of Iris Hispanica, while another had a batch of 10,000 Tulip Gesneriana major which sold like hot cakes.

The Arnold Arboretum.

There is always something to interest the visitor at the Arnold Arboretum. The lilac display this year is remarkably fine. This is one of the few shrubs which winter cold never seems to affect in the least and it is no wonder that lilacs are becoming more popular each year. During a visit the past week we spent two hours looking over the remarkable collection of these plants and took down the names of over 100 varieties which seemed to be first class. The following appeared to be extra fine, with very large trusses: Marie LeGraye, still the best all around white. Mme. Lemoine and Comte de Kerchove are newer whites of great merit. Furst Lichtenstein is a magnificent rosy lilac variety with huge trusses, an improvement on the older Jaeques Calot. Frau Bertha Dammann is a beautiful single white; Belle de Nancy, satiny rose; President Grevy, a beautiful double blue, panicles fourteen inches in length. Ludwig Spaeth is the best of the dark, purplish-red varieties. Some of the other noticeable sorts were Comtesse Horace de Choiseul, Dr. Von Regel, President Massart, La Tour d'Auvergne, Gehemrath Hayden, Michael Buchner, beautiful pale lilac color; Ambroise Verschaffelt, Emile Lemoine, Croix de Brary, Philemon, beautiful dark variety; Lilarosa, Goliath, Prof. C. S. Sargent, Belle de Nancy, Mme. Abel Chatenay, beautiful white; Mme. Briot Lamarck, Dr. Lindley, Alphonse Lavalee, De Humboldt, Macrostachya, beautiful blush white, and Francisque Morel.

Of the newer and scarcer Lemoine hybrids Jackson Dawson pointed out the following as being extra good: Crampel, immense florets considerably larger than a silver 25-cent piece; Mme. Casimir Perire and Mme. Leon Simon. Others were hardly equal to the older hybrids and Mr. Dawson thought the limit had been about reached in lilac hybrids.

The earliest species to flower is S. oblata. Other very desirable species are Chinensis, Persica and the graceful pubescens. The handsome tree varieties, Japonica and Perkenensis, promised a fine display of bloom later.

The shrubby loniceras on the opposite side of the avenue to the lilacs were very beautiful. Some of the more desirable sorts noted were L. Tartarica in variety, L. Morrowi, L. alba, the finest white variety; L. candida, L. bella albida and L. Ruprechtiana.

Mr. Dawson is at present working strongly on the crataegus family and many thousands of seedling hawthorns from a few inches to three or four feet high were noted. Some 300 varieties of these are already named. A batch of 1,100 different lots of crataegus seeds have recently been sown and it would look as though there would be enough plants when developed to stock all the ornamental grounds in the United States.

A batch of rhododendron hybrids, maximum crossed with best Catawbiense hybrids, came through the winter unscathed and some were showing flower. In the propagating house were noted boxes containing many thousands of seedling azaleas, rhododendrons and other plants. Particularly interesting was a batch of willows, chestnuts, walnuts and other plants secured by Prof. Sargent on his recent trip to Siberia, Manchuria and Korea, some of these coming from the present site of the Russo-Japanese war and being new to cultivation.

A strikingly handsome tree of Japanese origin is Acanthopanax ricinifolium, foliage quite tropical in appearance, resembling that of ricinus. The damage done by the recent severe winter at the arboretum is more widespread than ever before, but the copious rains of the present spring have caused such a rampant growth on trees and shrubs that this is not now particularly noticeable.

Various Notes.

Hitchings & Co. have a large number of contracts on hand for new greenhouses in this vicinity at present. The bulk are on private estates and include the following: J. B. Case, Newton, range of greenhouses; W. Firth, Brookline, one house; F. A. Day, Newton, range of houses; Miss M. S. Ames, North Easton, range of houses; Mrs. A. S. Bigelow, Cohasset, range of houses; F. Peabody, Hyde Park, range of houses; H. I. Wallace, Fitchburg, range of houses; W. O. Blake, Hingham, range of houses; E. Lovering, Holyoke, one house; H. D. Auchincloss, Newport, range of houses; Mrs. J. A. Codman, Newport, one house; Miss Alice Kettletas, Newport, one house; T. Curley, Providence, two commercial houses; E. D. Clark, Providence, carnation house 30x200; R. J. Erwin, Hartford, Conn., one house; E. K. Hubbard, Middletown, Conn., one house.

George A. Sutherland, of Hawley street, one of our leading wholesalers, has made an assignment for the equal benefit of his creditors.

At Horticultural Hall on May 28 James L. Little showed four varieties of Malmaison carnations: Prime Minister, brilliant scarlet; Lord Rosebery, bright salmon scarlet; Trumpeter, deep scarlet, and Mrs. Martin R. Smith, fine bright rose of enormous size, said to be the handsomest Malmaison yet raised.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society has issued a circular calling special attention to its work and to the prizes awarded under its direction. Each year handsome premiums are offered by the society for the purpose of encouraging the development and ornamentation of private grounds and the establishment and maintenance of greenhouses for the culture of plants, fruits and vegetables. These prizes have now been awarded for over fifty years.

A meeting of the Independent Co-operative Flower Growers' Association was held at the New England House, Boston, on Wednesday evening, where there was a good attendance. There is little doubt from the sentiment expressed at the meeting, but that a new wholesale market will be formed in the very near future. About 100 growers are pledged to support the new concern and a considerable amount of stock is already taken up. Several locations in the business center are being looked up, one with 7,000 feet of floor space being the most popular. There has been considerable dissatisfaction with the governing body of the present wholesale market for some time. The dissatisfied members claim that undue favoritism is shown to some and that their petitions and claims for recognition have been ignored. They object to growers from other states being allowed to come into the market and while considering the present market excellent in many ways, think it is too far away from the business center for retailers to patronize it. The Columbus avenue market has proved quite remunerative to the stockholders and we hope some arrangement can be made to settle the present differences.

R. J. Farquhar & Co. have a fine collection of late blooming tulips in flower at their nurseries. Some of the named Darwins are remarkably good. A few of the best are Glory, light red; Liberia, dark purple maroon; Herold, light violet; Richelieu, bright red and Grand Duchess, deep rosy pink.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

This is Decoration day and everybody seems fairly busy with some kind of work in the cut flower line. The wholesale market was somewhat strengthened for the occasion. All outdoor flowers are in full bloom and these are about the only flowers that sell well for this day. Other cut flowers at the wholesale houses are enough for the demand and only special grades are short and the demand is most excellent for these, as many of the social functions call for fancy stock.

American Beauties are selling well in all grades. Choice are still at $2.50 to $3 per dozen. Shorts run as low as $3 per hundred. In Brides, Maids and Meteors there are plenty for the demand though some days the market is short on this stock. For good roses $5 and $6 per hundred is the price. Some extra specials run as high as $8. The market is also fairly well supplied in good carnations in all varieties. Some extra fine Lawson, Joost and Hill are to be seen, also very fine Prosperity and Estelle. Of these the specials are $3 per hundred, firsts $2 and the common $1.50.

Peonies are plentiful, white and pink. Nick Himmer, of Maramar Highlands, brought in a two-horse wagon load of them the past week, from which he averaged about 3 cents each. At the wholesale houses 4 cents is asked. Harrisii and callas are becoming scarce. Lily of the valley is very fine at present at $3 per hundred. A great deal of outdoor stock is crowding the market, which is in great demand today, Monday. Sweet peas are in great abundance. All light shades are selling well, at from 35 to 75 cents per hundred. In greens Asparagus Sprengeri is having a big call; plumosus strings are scarce; smilax is plentiful and so are adiantum and common ferns.

We are having most beautiful weather and plenty of decorative work is going on at the World's Fair grounds. School commencements are coming early this year and quite a lot of this kind of work was done the past week. This week a number of early June weddings are reported, a few very large affairs among the west end florists. Funeral work, too, is keeping some of us very busy. Miss Roosevelt's visit during the past week exhausted the supply of American Beauties. Miss Roosevelt's car and room at the Catlin mansion were handsomely decorated. At all the social gatherings in her honor among the fashionable folks cut flowers in great profusion were used.

Bedding plantsmen are nearly sold out, although the bad weather hindered them in the start. Echeveria and alternanthera are scarce, so are geraniums. From the looks of the homes in the fashionable districts a great many of these must have been used. The cemetery florists have had a very busy time this spring. They had all they possibly could do and they have scarcely any bedding plants left for sale.

Various Notes.

W. D. Keith, of Ennis, Texas, is in town. Mr. Keith is president of the Rubber Tree Culture Co., in Mexico.

George Young and wife, of New York, are in the city taking in our World's Fair. They are guests of James Young, of C. Young & Sons Co.

Next Sunday will be the first Sunday opening of Shaw's garden this year. Everything is being put in shape for the big crowd which takes advantage of these Sunday openings. These, with the many strangers in town attracted by the World's Fair, will no doubt make this the largest Sunday opening in the history of the garden.

The peony show in the Horticulture building at the Fair this week promises better results than the rose exhibition of last week. The dates of this exhibition are May 28 to June 7.

Charles Juengel, state vice-president of the S. A. F., would like to hear from all florists who are not yet members of our society. Mr. Juengel will be at the club meeting on next Thursday afternoon with blank applications for those who wish to join.

The exhibition of hardy roses at the World's Fair, in the Horticulture building, takes place June 18 to 28. There are six classes. June 15 is the last day for entries to Superintendent Hadkinson.

Illinois dedicated her state building at the World's Fair last week. Governor Richard Yates and wife with mounted staff and 850 cadets attended. The building was elaborately decorated with plants, roses and carnations, the governor's wife carrying a huge bunch of American Beauties which were grown in Springfield, Ill.

The Texas building, too, had its dedication the past week. The entire building on the inside was decorated with cape jasmines, all coming direct from the Lone Star state. James Bass, of Temple, Texas, was in charge of the decorations.

The vice-president of the S. A. F. will on Thursday meet the chairmen of the different committees who will have charge of the S. A. F. affairs, including C. A. Kuehn, the superintendent of trades' display at the Exposition building, Thirteenth and Olive streets, to perfect plans for the coming convention which is only ten weeks off. Those who will meet with the vice-president and superintendent are Fred Ammann, Otto G. Koenig, F. C. Weber, Carl Beyer, Henry Ostertag, F. M. Ellis and F. H. Meinhardt.

The Florists' Club meeting will be held Thursday afternoon, June 9, at 2 o'clock. All members are earnestly requested to attend, as matters of great importance pertaining to the S. A. F. convention will come before them. As the busy plant season will be over, the largest meeting of the year is looked for. Emil Schray, Fred Ammann and Mr. Thompson, of Shaw's Garden, will lead discussions on very interesting subjects. A box of the Florists' Club's special cigars will be handed around.

C. A. Kuehn, superintendent of trades' display, reports that every mail brings in orders for space. All those who contemplate making an exhibition should communicate with Mr. Kuehn at once, before all the choice space is taken up, as only ten more weeks are left when the convention will be in full blast.

Mr. Wertheimer, of Lion & Wertheimer, of New York, was with us recently. The firm will make an extensive exhibition of ribbons at the trades' display.

The St. Louis Cactus Club held its annual picnic and excursion last Sunday at Chautauqua, Ill. Although the weather was bad a large crowd attended.

The S. A. F. souvenir book is already in the hands of the printers, who are working on the cover, which will be handsomely embossed, also the back of the book which will show Carnation Fiancee for the Chicago Carnation Co. Advertisements must reach St. Louis not later than June 15. To save time send them direct to J. J. Beneke, 1220 Olive street.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Memorial day opened in New York cloudy, sultry and with hardly an indication of special demand or any call out of the ordinary. The quantity of everything is enormous and much of the supply is not up to the standard in quality and business cannot improve while present conditions and overshipments continue. The extreme heat also affects the retail demand and uniform stagnation about expresses the state of things in the metropolis.

Not only are roses here in floods, but carnations, outdoor valley, lilac and lilies, of which there seems no end. Peonies have arrived in all colors and are welcome. Brilliant retail windows already manifest their value. They grow more popular yearly.

Various Notes.

Next week the American Peony Society gives its exhibit, June 8 and 9, at the Bronx Park Botanic Garden and the week following, Monday, June 13, the peony night of the New York Florists' Club will doubtless see a very large exhibit and attendance of members and friends of the club, it being ladies' night also, with strawberry and cream accompaniments. A fine musical program and other features will add to the pleasures of the last meeting of the club until September. In addition to the prizes mentioned in our last for the outing of the club on June 29, donations have been received from Schloss Bros., W. J. Elliott, Chas. Weathered, F. R. Pierson, B. Suzuki, L. J. Kreshover, Patrick O'Mara, John Scott, Arthur T. Boddington, Alex McConnell, Alex Guttman, Geo. M. Geraghty, Clucas & Boddington Co., Vaughan's Seed Store, W. B. DuRie and M. Gibbs, the values ranging from $3 to $10 and so an aggregate of $200 is to be devoted to the athletic contests of the day. All the young folks are provided for and a good many unique battles will occur. The programs will be distributed at the club's meeting, June 13, and everything now indicates a large attendance.

The exodus to Europe this summer by members of the trade in many of its departments is greater than usual. Wholesalers, growers, supply men and seedsmen, several accompanied by their wives, have already departed or will early in June.

Chas. B. Hanft, of Hanft, Bros., goes to Saratoga this week to manage the Aldine hotel there, which he has rented for the season. He will be glad to see any visiting florists from New York at his hostelry this summer.

The carnationist, A. J. Tharp, of Bedford Station, first shipper to Moore, Hentz & Nash, some seven years ago, celebrated his silver wedding on May 20. About 200 people attended the reception, among them Mr. Nash of the above firm, who reports many handsome presents bestowed upon Mr. and Mrs. Tharp.

Miss Emily Isabel Wadley, only daughter of Albert Wadley, of New Rochelle, was married to Arthur Goodenough, of Bristol, Conn., last Tuesday evening, the father of the groom officiating. The decorations at the house and church revealed the artistic ability of the veteran florist whose hand has not lost its cunning, even if the accident of a year or two ago has left his underpinning perpetually the worse for wear. White spring flowers were abundantly used, an arbor of lilies and dogwood completely hiding the pulpit. The bride carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and the six maids had Bridesmaid roses.

Early closing is becoming popular and with many after this week 3 p. m. seems to be considered the popular hour. It would be well if this system could be made conveniently universal until the end of August.

A good deal of sympathy is expressed by the trade for W. A. Manda, of South Orange, in the loss of his furniture and valuable paintings by fire last week.

Elliott's and Cleary's auction rooms are busy places these days, and to one who has visited these marts for years a remarkable feature is the number of new faces and the few florists to be found there. The outside public has found a mecca, evidently, and readily absorb everything that is offered at good prices. The sales will close shortly and the season, which promised badly at its beginning, ends in the most satisfactory way to all concerned. The year, too, which is now about at an end with the seedmen, has far exceeded all expectations, many declaring it to be the greatest season of their experience.

The closing of the schools and the European travel should make themselves felt for a few weeks among the retailers, many of whom are complaining of dull times at present.

The Plant Growers' Market at Canal street, is an interesting place these days, buyers arriving often about the time most of us go to bed. In fact, one prominent retailer told me he had to be there at 2 a. m. to get what he wanted, so great is the demand. The street peddlers are everywhere in evidence and the necessity of a proper market building is more and more apparent every day.

Bowling.

The Florists' Bowling Club met on Tuesday evening, May 24, at the new alleys, Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue, and a much increased attendance encouraged the officers of the club, notwithstanding the intense heat. The special prize for highest score was won by Captain Lang, with a total of 221. Next week Mr. Lang will give the special prize for competition among the balance of the members. There will be special efforts made during the next few weeks to test the ability of the members who intend to be at the St. Louis convention and the make-up of the club to compete there will soon be decided. The scores made at the last meeting were as follows:

Lang	150	221	...	...	...
James	125	142	...	...	...
Stewart	106	115	121	...	...

CHICAGO.

The Market.

In spite of many unfavorable circumstances, the Decoration day business is counted as the best on record. This was because of great quantities of stock moved, for prices were lower than usual. The early part of the week was probably the worst period ever known in average returns for the growers, and conditions improved but little up to Friday, when there was considerable shipping business, in spite of the fact that keeping qualities were not to be looked for in the stock. Saturday saw an enormous shipping demand, which continued fairly strong on Sunday and even up to noon on Monday there were boxes going out. Local business was fair.

Receipts on Saturday and Sunday, while very heavy in miscellaneous items, were not equal to requirements on roses and carnations and prices, which early in the week had been steadily declining, took a brace and were fully up to advance quotations. Many orders for carnations were sent out short, also many on roses, while at the time there were roses left in the market, but of such low grade that they could not be shipped. There were plenty of long Beauties at all times. On Monday several growers who had not shipped a flower for two days sent in big boxes of carnations, too late to find a buyer, and robbed themselves of the week's profit.

There were very heavy supplies of peonies and a big business was done in this line but not at so good average prices as have frequently been realized at this season. When business ceased Sunday there were many hundreds of dozens still unsold and Monday's receipts were far heavier than the sales. Peonies began going into storage again on Monday but it remains for the future to show what profit there will be in this operation this year. With the unseasonable weather, peonies threaten to inundate the market all through June, where usually they are well over before school closings and are held for the good market which comes at that time. However, heavy plantings in late years have so increased the supply that even in normal seasons values must be readjusted.

All the miscellaneous items sold out fairly well for Decoration day except cape jasmine and valley. The capes were salable only in limited quantities and made very low prices, with many spoiling on wholesalers' hands. Valley was in large supply and did not seem to be wanted. Lilac cleaned up much better than might have been expected from the quantities offered; it all found a home, if good for anything. Lilies went cheaply and there was no time when it was not possible to find a bargain in odds and ends.

On Tuesday there was fair business but unwieldy receipts and prices, which had begun to slide on Monday, took a further drop, except on the best grade of roses, which are so few in proportion to the total receipts that they hold firm in price.

Various Notes.

Peter Weiland was up from New Castle last week, returning Monday. Yesterday he came into sole ownership of the big greenhouse plant at New Castle, from which Peter Reinberg has had half the cut this season. Mr. Weiland has opened a wholesale store at Cincinnati, in the same building with Wm. Murphy, and will hereafter sell his own cut, taking personal charge of the work. The greenhouses will be under the management of Peter Heirnes.

The weather always counts for much in the flower business and it has been so utterly unreliable of late as to be worthy of note. The vagaries of the past week included: On Wednesday before Decoration day, 87 degrees; twenty-four hours later, 45; Friday, 71; Saturday, 75; Sunday, 74; Decoration day, 42 and rain.

One of the novelties was bougainvillea, not often seen in this market, which Amling found a good seller.

The cold storage ferns are gone, cleaned up nicely at $4.50 per thousand where the owners held for it.

C. M. Dickinson has moved his family to Park Ridge, where they formerly resided.

Carl Thomas went to his old home in Pennsylvania Sunday night to spend a two weeks' vacation. On his return A. L. Randall and family will go to their fruit farm in Michigan to spend the summer.

J. B. Deamud was last Saturday elected president of the Model Oil and Gas Mfg. Co., a newly organized company operating in Kansas adjoining the Chicago-Kansas Co., in which Mr. Deamud was already interested.

E. E. Pieser says that in all the years he has been in the trade he never saw so many flowers in market as were moved for Decoration day, and there were not enough carnations or shipping roses.

F. C. Struvy returned Tuesday from a six weeks' trip to California and Mexico.

Bassett & Washburn report selling 15,000 longiflorum lilies for Decoration day.

It is the report that young stock of Chatenay rose has not been selling the way the propagators expected it would, from the success which two or three growers made with it the past season.

There were very few plants offered for Decoration day. Some well flowered hydrangeas were good property and Beauty plants with one well developed flower and several buds sold well.

Edwin Eagle has closed up his place on the south side and will remove to a fruit farm and summer resort near Union Pier, Mich.

Albert Fuchs has closed a contract with the E. F. Winterson Co., whereby they will conduct his auction, June 15 and 16. Mr. Winterson will do the selling and Mr. Degnan will have charge of the business arrangements. There is a very large quantity of good stock in the houses and one of the biggest sales on record is assured. Mr. Fuchs will not only sell the stock, but also the greenhouses for removal from the property.

P. J. Hauswirth says he is having a nice run of work, a great deal of banquet and dinner work in the Auditorium.

HAIL.

The Florists' Hail Association is adjusting losses at Pueblo, Colo.; Rochester, N. Y.; Reading, Pa., and Guthrie, Okla. The Pueblo storm was the most severe that has occurred since the organization of the Association. Ten members of the F. H. A. lost from ninety to 100 per cent of their glass. All claims that have been properly presented are either adjusted or are in process of adjustment.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

The first consignment of plants which have been ordered to stock the mammoth greenhouses that are being erected by the United States Cut Flower Company, arrived here May 27, over 20,000 carnations being received, while over 12,000 more are expected in a few days. The plants, which are all strong, vigorous stock, are of the best varieties obtainable, including the standard varieties and latest introductions. The stock was purchased of Dorner & Sons Co., of Lafayette, Ind.; S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.; Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, and others, and several thousand plants were grown in this city by Harry N. Hoffman.

The work of erecting the greenhouses is proceeding at a rapid rate. Nearly all of the iron framework has been placed in position and painted. President Algie states that two cars of ironwork, which will complete the shipment, are expected daily and can be placed in position in a few days after being received. Tuesday the work of building the brick benches was commenced. The glass for the greenhouses has all been received and can be placed in position as soon as the structural work is completed.

Everything about the immense plant will be painted white. The 10,000 sash bars and caps which are to be used to hold the glass are now being painted. Each piece receives three coats of the best grade of white paint, each piece being dipped into a tank of paint, then passed through steel and rubber dies to work the pigment into the wood, and then brushed to distribute evenly, the work being thus performed with greater expedition than by brushing only.

"The greenhouse will be completed by July 10," said President Algie. "That does not mean the power houses and various other auxiliary buildings, however. Those buildings are not needed immediately, but we will have them completed by the first of August."

Guthrie, Okla. — Furrow Bros. suffered a very heavy loss by hail last week, their place being completely wrecked and all glass broken. Repairs will be made at once.

I have certainly been well pleased with the Review and would not like to be without it; I think every florist should take it.—C. L. Shanks, Newton, Kan.

IMPRESSIONS OF ST. LOUIS.

St. Louis is a much maligned metropolis. The more visitors see of St. Louis the more they like it. St. Louis is a phenomenally well arranged city and well kept, abundantly supplied with public parks and places of amusement. The heat of St. Louis is discovered to exist to a considerable degree in the minds of the outside world. St. Louis is closely connected with the country. You can get on a car in its throbbing heart and ride twenty miles straight and far out away from the noise and bustle of the city, to lakes, rivers, country places and clubs, suburban resorts, through the fresh real country. Those who have never seen Missouri, who have ridden in trolley cars over the flats from Buffalo to Niagara, from New York to Coney Island or from Chicago to Waukegan know nothing of what it means to speed through the country about St. Louis over the various splendid electric routes which radiate here. It is a fact that St. Louis has more beautiful homes than any other city in the world. Many of these homes are palaces. If a Chicagoan or a New Yorker were to go to sleep at home and wake up in, say, Portland place, Westmoreland place, or Vandeventer place in St. Louis he would, I sincerely believe, hesitate before he decided that he was not in paradise. Enough said.

Impressions have gone abroad that St. Louis hotels have doubled their rates and that hotel accommodations are hard to get. This is not true. The souvenir book, which will be gotten up by the St. Louis Florists' Club and will be in the hands of the members of the S. A. F. by July 15, will show ninety-six hotels, where they are located and their prices. The highest priced hotel down town is the Jefferson, which has a capacity of 1,500 and their charges are from $2.50 per day up. The Planters hotel is from $2 per day up. Southern, Lindell and St. Nicholas are $1.50 per day up. The combined capacity of these first-class hotels is 5,000 persons. At the Hotel Rozier, which is across from the convention hall, with a capacity of 400, the rates are from $1 per day up.

The souvenir book will also have a map of the ground plan of the World's Fair showing the exact location of all the buildings; on the other side showing all the streets and locations of the different places of amusement outside of the World's Fair grounds, which are Shaw's Garden, Tower Grove park, Lafayette and Forest parks, Crompton Hill reservoir, the old Fair grounds, Forest park highlands, Delmar Garden, West End heights and Suburban Garden. Those mentioned above will be the most attractive spots for the S. A. F. members to visit. J. J. B.

PACIFIC COAST.

OUTDOOR-GROWN ROSES.

Before we got into the habit of growing roses under glass in California many of the nursery men had big fields of roses planted in the open ground for cut blooms and except in the coldest weather there was no difficulty in making this portion of the business one of the best paying. Now the rose patches are neglected and it is only in the spring of the year, for about three months, that any use is made of them. The street venders are the only dealers who will handle them. Safrano, Jacqueminot, Madame Lambard, Bougere, Elisa Sauvage, Bon Silene, Marie Van Houtte, Papa Gontier and a host of others were great favorites and from $1 to $2 per hundred was the usual price secured, which paid very well, considering that the plants lasted for several years and they did not require any special care except to keep them well pruned and the soil well worked up and occasionally watered.

Last season I planted about 500 strong two-year-old plants, of Ulrich Brunner, Mrs. John Laing, Belle Siebrecht, Mme. Caroline Testout and Liberty, even quantity of each. I put them out in November and pruned them back well. They commenced blooming in March and continued through April, May and June and long after the hot weather had weakened and bleached out the hothouse roses I still was able to cut hundreds of long-stemmed flowers with splendid, clean foliage that I had no trouble to dispose of at $3 per hundred. The Ulrich Brunner and Mrs. Laing were exceptionally fine, as they make stems averaging two feet long with splendid, big flowers to match. I kept the moisture from them during July and August, pruned and mulched them well in September and gave them a thorough soaking several times. They gave me another succession of flowers fully as good as those I had in the spring and I cut a good quantity up to December. I found that they were one of the best paying propositions on my place as there was no trouble at any time to dispose of them. I planted several hundred Brides, Maids and Perles also but they do not make a good stem outdoors, although the flowers were fine.

Roses do well anywhere in California near the coast except in the southern portion of the state, where the season for flowering is much shorter than in the central part, owing to the hot weather. They like a heavy, adobe ground and do not do well where there is too much sand in the soil. They can be handled out in the open field provided there is not too much wind to mar the flowers. The varieties I have mentioned stand considerable pruning and want plenty of moisture. About four years is the average time to figure on the plants giving good service. After that throw them out and replant with younger stock and on another piece of ground, if you can, and use the first location for some other stock for a season or two when after a good manuring and spading it can be used again for roses. Roses are heavy feeders and they will exhaust soil much quicker than many other kinds of stock and where a grower's land is limited they are often kept too long in one place. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are within a few hours of Decoration day and the stores are piled high with the products of the season. A great many flowers are shipped to Nevada, Oregon and Utah and I think this portion of the business averages about the same as in former years. Flowers are extremely plentiful and very cheap and outside of the outlook for Decoration day there is very little doing. We have had several good weddings and school commencements during the week, but funeral work has not been in evidence. A great many Italian and Chinese growers have gone into raising outdoor stock, such as candytuft, stocks, gaillardias, poppies, etc., for this particular day and I have never seen such a quantity of hardy flowers. The sweet peas are extra fine and can be bought at $4 per hundred bunches, each bunch containing 100 stems. Calla lilies are somewhat scarce, as their first crop of blooms is over and it is only where they have been well watered that it is possible to cut many flowers. They are in great favor with the flower-buying public at this time of the year, wholesaling today at from $1 to $1.50 per hundred. Carnations are very cheap but the tendency in prices is somewhat upwards. Roses are not plentiful but there has been such a slight demand that the want of them has not been felt to any extent. Bride gladioli are handled in large quantities.

Various Notes.

The San Francisco florists, with but a few exceptions, have placards in their windows announcing that after June 1 the stores will close at 1 p. m. on Sundays. This new departure is hailed with delight by everyone interested in the trade.

A committee endorsed by the Mayor, the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade and the Merchants' Exchange will tender a banquet to John McLaren, superintendent of the city parks, at the Palace Hotel on June 2. J. S. Webster is chairman of the committee.

Albert Vinther, a gardener and florist formerly employed by A. M. Sanborn, of Oakland, committed suicide last week by swallowing carbolic acid. He was 45 years of age and leaves a widow and six children.

Samuel G. Stevens, the pioneer nurseryman and florist of Redwood City, died on Wednesday. He located in San Mateo county forty years ago and remained steadily in business ever since. He was born in England 75 years ago and was twice married. His only surviving relatives are his widow and a nephew. The funeral took place on Friday. G.

CALLA, O.—The formal transfer of the property, business and good will of L. Templin & Sons to the new Templin & Sons Co., took place May 19. The Templins have no longer any interest in the plant.

The Market.

Decoration day trade proved to be very good this year and, notwithstanding the fact that stock was scarce in all lines, it was fully up to last year, if not somewhat better. Had it not been for the failure of the peony crop to be in time, also had lilies been more plentiful, this year would have far exceeded last, for the demand was far in excess of the supply.

It was expected that carnations would be scarce and that roses would not be equal to the demand and we were not disappointed. But still there was a large supply, especially of carnations, and they were of good quality. Roses were mostly very poor. Beauties, as for the last month, were in good demand, and some of the stock was A1. Good short-stemmed Beauties were especially scarce and many more could have been disposed of to advantage.

There were practically no outdoor flowers that could be used by the florists, with the exception of irises and large quantities of them were sold. The big crop of peonies was just about four days late, but still there were some and they were quickly picked up at first-class prices. As it is, we will have peonies through June and with carnations and roses scarce they will be good property.

New southern ferns are now coming in large quantities and though they are a trifle soft, still they are much better than the rubbish we have been handling. They sell at $1.50 per thousand and it is hard to keep any on hand, they go so quickly.

Various Notes.

It is a strange thing that the average grower pays so little attention to what the market really wants. Take for instance, sweet peas. Why is it that the grower insists in planting one-half or even more of pink and that dark pink, which in many cases go on the dump or are sold at a sacrifice, when the buyers are looking everywhere for lavender, white or daybreak pink? It would appear that a little judicious attention to what the public really wanted would result in considerable profit to some enterprising grower. And sweet peas are only one of many cases where the same thing is being seen almost every day.

The growers in the Jabez Elliott Flower Market report a very good trade. Their entire stock of plants and cut flowers being exhausted, very good prices prevailed.

Cincinnati, already supplied with five wholesale cut flower houses, is about to have another. Peter Weiland, of New Castle, Ind., is to open up a store to dispose of his cut. He was in this city last week looking over the field and leased a place at 128 East Third street, second floor, opposite Wm. Murphy.

Nick Weber spent part of last week in Chicago and Milwaukee, returning home Sunday night.

F. W. Hardesty made the run over to St. Louis last week to have a look in at the Fair.

John Evans was a caller, as also was Martin Reukauf. C. J. OHMER.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, N. Y., were hit by hail on May 25. They were insured.

An arrangement has been made whereby members of the American Association of Nurserymen who will attend the Atlanta convention June 22 to 24 can travel from New York via steamer to either Savannah or Charleston, fare $33.25.

The landscape work at the University of Chicago, after plans by Olmsted Bros., Boston, is attended by many difficulties, not the least of which is the fact that the soil is pure lake sand. In the planting of some 4-inch elms this season an excavation was made sixteen feet square and four feet deep for each tree and this filled with prairie loam, brought from Elgin, Ill., forty miles away.

San Jose scale has made its appearance in Oklahoma and the secretary of the territorial board of agriculture says it is because the territory has been the dumping ground for infested nursery stock, there being no inspection law. Such a law was passed by both houses of the legislature at the last session, but was vetoed by the governor because of mutilation by an incompetent engrossing clerk.

In writing of the attractions of Atlanta as a convention city in late June, Secretary George C. Seager, of the American Association of Nurserymen, says: "The opportunity to see the famous Georgia peach orchards is one which no nurseryman should miss. Ample arrangements will be made for their inspection, and southern hospitality is waiting for the nurserymen of the northern sections, where the winter has been long enough, severe enough and tedious enough to make the land of sunshine and flowers seem peculiarly inviting."

NATURAL FERTILIZERS.

Animal manures, unless carefully saved and protected from heavy rains and excessive fermentation, are not rich, and are very variable in their manurial value. Farmyard manures are most effective and valuable when composted or mixed with the soil, or when used in a well-rotted state as a mulch for growing crops. Rapidly fermenting manure will injure the roots of almost any plant. Liquid manures should therefore be made from materials that have already fermented or rotted under such conditions as to conserve their fertilizing value.

The following proportion will make capital solutions: Ten pounds of pulverized sheep-manure to fifty gallons of rain-water; or twenty pounds of cow or horse-manure (droppings, when in a comparatively dry condition) to fifty gallons of rain-water; or three or five pounds of hen or pigeon-manure to fifty gallons of water.

The best way is to put the manure (to which two pounds of soot may be added) into a coarse-fibred sack and soak it in water for several days, sousing the sack up and down occasionally and mashing it with a blunt stick, so as to thoroughly break up the contents.

Strong-growing plants with good root systems will be benefited by feeding with such manure solutions once in ten days or two weeks during the periods of most active growth. When growth is slow or checked by cold or cloudy weather feeding should be discontinued until active growth again indicates its need.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The volume of Memorial day business appears to have been larger than usual. Carnations were in very heavy demand, with the supply not quite large enough to meet all requirements. There was some complaint of sleepiness. Peonies were very popular, but in short supply. All roses were poorer in quality, but higher in price Tuesday, but peonies were accumulating and prices were lower except on the fancy grades. The commencement at Bryn Mawr college on Wednesday creates a heavy demand for sweet peas, Beauties, Liberties and valley. Business may be said to be excellent. Outdoor sweet peas are arriving.

Plant Notes.

The last ten days have been days of great activity in bedding, basket and decorative plants. It would be absurd to say that the growers had sold out. The supply is too large for that to be literally true, except in isolated cases, some special size, or variety, or small places with limited quantity. But the quantity of plants sold has been most gratifying. No one looking over the houses of the growers today could have any doubt that the people love growing plants. Their use in gardens, on porches, at windows and in the cities of the departed is universal. The growers of pot roses, geraniums, small blooming plants and others expected this heavy demand accentuated by the week of bright, warm weather and have profited by it to the fullest extent. But I think the foliage plant growers have been agreeably surprised at the strong tide running in their favor. Many of them feel that this stock is better sold after the summer's growth, but it is doubtful policy to refuse orders that hardly any one is bold enough to venture. Areca lutescens, considered by many a back number, is experiencing a run on the decorative sizes, while the other standard foliage plants are being sent out as fast as they round into salable shape.

Answers to Correspondents.

REVIEW readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses or the Flower Market. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

11. Who is the buyer described in your column and whom does he represent? John McIntyre, with H. H. Battles.

12. Will the Liberty rose be grown more largely about Philadelphia next season? Yes.

13. I have two small houses, 20x75 and 16x75 feet, respectively. What should I grow in them to sell to the Philadelphia market to make them pay best? I know very little about the business yet. An impossible question. If it must be answered without further information, try Asparagus plumosus nanus.

14. Does bouvardia pay as a cut flower in the wholesale market? Apparently not, but it is deserving of further trial.

15. Did Dutch bulbs forced for cut flowers prove profitable last winter and spring? No; it was an off season.

CLEANING CUCUMBER HOUSES.

Since pests of various kinds are likely to increase with the age of the greenhouse it is good practice to follow some systematic treatment of the house each year as a means of prevention. As cucumber houses are usually empty for a portion of the year it is possible to apply stringent remedies. We have made a practice each year of thoroughly fumigating our houses with either burnt sulphur or hydrocyanic gas, or both, before putting in the crop. We have burned sulphur at the rate of 200 grams (about six ounces) to 1,000 cubic feet of space and hydrocyanic gas at the rate of

½ more by weight of sulphuric acid.
½ more by weight of water than acid.

This amount is sufficient for 100 cubic feet.

The sulphur treatment is not as expensive as the cyanide, and while the sulphur is desirable for some things the cyanide is better adapted for others. Either of these treatments will effectually remove certain pests common to greenhouses, and we believe it desirable for growers to practice fumigation methods.—George E. Stone, in Bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

manure and coarse sand. Good drainage is essential, for although when growing water must be given freely, it should be remembered that a stagnant condition of the soil will result in yellow and sickly-looking leaves. As these plants are often kept for a long time in the same pots, when grown under cool conditions, small lumps of charcoal should be well mixed with the potting soil.

The aspidistra is said to be almost hardy, and I have seen a number of plants in a house from which frost was scarcely excluded. These had a healthy appearance, but were somewhat stunted in their growth. For general use they are much better grown under warm conditions, especially during the time they are making growth. The leaves and stems are then longer, which result in more graceful specimens being secured. The most suitable time to repot or divide the plants is just when they are beginning to grow. A little warmth at this time is most beneficial, as it will greatly assist the formation of new roots, and the plants will soon become established. Abundance of water will be required during the summer, when growth is being made, but not much will be needed during the dark days of winter. Indeed, many plants are spoilt by inattention to this particular.

Aspidistras are not much troubled with insect pests, but when grown in warm houses, thrips sometimes makes its

ASPIDISTRA LURIDA.

Perhaps no other plant, used generally for decorative purposes, is better known than Aspidistra lurida. No doubt this is owing to its very accommodating nature, as it will grow and flourish under adverse conditions where many other plants would succumb. In houses where gas is used, in smoky districts, or dark rooms, it is a most valuable plant, but it will be scarcely necessary to add that it will be more satisfactory under better conditions.

The aspidistra is popularly known as the parlor palm. Its thick, handsome, shining leaves, somewhat resemble those of some kinds of palms, and from the fact that it flourishes so well in "parlors," the name is appropriate. Although the aspidistra will grow in a poor, light soil, it thrives much better under generous treatment. A suitable medium in which to put it is good turfy loam, leaf-mold, a little well-decayed appearance, but can easily be kept at bay by sponging or syringing periodically with any approved insecticide. Used as a window plant, the aspidistra should have the leaves sponged over once a week with clean water, to free them of dust. Or the plants may be stood outside during a shower of rain, if the weather be not too cold or windy. The variegated aspidistra is in every way as good and useful as the green, it being purely a matter of taste which one may like best.

It is fairly well known that aspidistra flowers appear on the creeping rhizomes, and seem to "sit upon the soil," so to speak. There are many who do not recognize them as flowers, and I have several times had them pointed out to me as something extraordinary.—Gardeners' Magazine.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

Clover seed is rapidly approaching the usual summer dullness.

The A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, Ia., will build a large warehouse this season.

Oklahoma City, Okla. — Mr. De Beere, representing the L. A. Budlong Co., onion set growers, Chicago, has been booking orders here.

The Ohio Department of Agriculture reports that the acreage of clover sown is ninety-one per cent of the area sown last year.

The acreage of clover sown in Michigan, compared with 1903, is, in the state and southern counties eighty-nine, in the central counties eighty-eight and in the northern counties ninety-two.

An international committee has been formed for the purpose of erecting a memorial at Paris to the late Henri de Vilmorin. The United States is represented by Prof. C. S. Sargent, of Arnold Arboretum, Boston.

Many seed dealers find that poultry supplies make a very popular side line and in some instances very large catalogue trades have been built up in this department. The Harvey Seed Co., of Montgomery, Ala., has found the poultry department well worth developing.

The English growers are attempting to rival with the potato the famous tulip craze in Holland. Seed stock of one or two new varieties has been sold, literally, for its weight in gold and now small plants of the variety Eldorado are selling at $10 each. And they have a National Potato Society.

In the three leading lines of canned vegetables—tomatoes, corn and peas—our export business, compared to the annual production and home consumption, is almost insignificant. A few tomatoes are sent abroad each year, and, of course, a small quantity of corn and peas; but our foreign trade in these vegetables is still in its infancy and will require vigorous pushing to develop. And development in exports of staple vegetables is desirable to provide wider markets and a bigger outlet for American canners, and to carry off a portion of the surplus in seasons of excessive production.

Toledo, O.—At the Scottwood Greenhouse they say that the sale of bedding plants has been heavier than ever before and that Decoration day trade was very good.

RAILROAD LANDSCAPING.

While the necessity of retrenchment, or some other reason, is prompting a number of railroads to discontinue their gardening departments, it is not so with the Michigan Central. It is nearly twenty-five years since it took up this work and last year at the greenhouses at Niles and Ypsilanti over 200,000 bedding plants and shrubs were grown for use on the station grounds along the line. This year the gardening department has been equally busy, most of the stock now being planted out. The Michigan Central also grows large quantities of cut flowers for its own use. The Chicago & Northwestern has large greenhouses at Waukegan, Ill., for the Milwaukee division and at West Chicago for the main line, where thousands of bedding plants and shrubbery have been grown the past season and are now planted out along the road. The Burlington is following suit, with its greenhouses at Aurora, and the Illinois Central is doing more work in this line than ever before, as its greenhouses at Champagne have only this season got under full headway.

PEWAUKEE, WIS.—Frank Scholl has a new house 18x40 in course of erection.

NORWOOD PARK, ILL.—Carl Niemann is starting in here as a carnation grower and expects to soon build up a good-sized range, producing for the Chicago market. Mr. Niemann was formerly for some years employed by the west parks as gardener and was president of the union.

VALLEY, NEB.—W. R. Nightengale does a considerable business in vegetable plants and says seeds of all kinds have germinated very irregularly this season. He is an extensive grower of sweet potato plants and these rotted early in the spring, but as soon as the weather cleared they began to sprout fairly well. He has a large tank and steam pump in connection with his hot-beds and can supply water in any quantity. S. B. Stewart, the Omaha seedsman, handles a great deal of Mr. Nightengale's output.

PARSONS, KANS.—Wm. J. Wirt says that business has been very good this spring, everybody rushed. He is building a new rose house, office, storeroom and workroom.

"THE more we advertise in the REVIEW the more we are convinced of its advertising value. It reaches the buyers, always. We disposed of nearly 10,000 verbenas with two insertions of our classified advertisement.''—WM. BIERSTADT & SON, Springfield, Ill.

I GO to the REVIEW, for I have learned by experience that it is the place to go for help in time of need; it gives help, sympathy, comfort and consolation; it finds buyers and sellers and brings them together; it keeps us posted in all lines belonging to the craft, and so I like it. —S. FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

ELLIOTTIA RACEMOSA was sent to England ten years ago by P. J. Berckmans, Augusta, Ga., but it succumbed. Two years ago Mr. Berckmans sent other plants of it and now to all appearances two of these are well established at Kew. The shrub is a native of Georgia, but is thought not now to occur in a wild state.

PRIMULA OBCONICA has shown considerable variation in late years and from selected seedlings varieties have been obtained that produce larger flowers and greater variety of color. The culture is so simple that, in view of the improved strains now obtainable, it should be more largely used. If the handling of the leaves is found to cause irritation of the skin, the difficulty can be overcome by the use of gloves.

IT IS COMMON knowledge that a perceptible deterioration is gradually taking place in the old-named varieties of auricula, which continue to be reproduced by the detaching of their offsets. To offset this each grower should each year isolate and cross-fertilize his best plants. Choose the middle of a fine day for the pollination, when the trusses are well developed, using a camel's hair brush. When the seed is ripe preserve it in the seed vessels in a dry place till early the following spring. Sow in shallow pans and place in a hotbed and give careful attention to ventilation to maintain an even temperature. This will make germination more uniform. Harden off the seedlings and pot. Be careful about disturbing the roots in repotting and do not force.

YOUNG PLANTS of bouvardia raised from cuttings this spring should be grown in a moist and warm atmosphere, repotting them when necessary, a final shift into 5-inch pots being sufficient for spring-struck plants.

THE HIPPEASTRUM (amaryllis) is now a decorative plant from every point of view and affords a great variety of color. For this reason their popularity is increasing, both in greenhouse and garden, but at the same time it may be doubted if their beauty and utility are appraised as highly as they should be. James Veitch & Sons have cross-bred these plants very successfully. They are potted and started into growth in the middle of February and the pots are plunged to the rim in tan, which generates a little warmth that induces root action in proportion to growth. Seedlings average taking three years to flower. There is now a pure white form.

IN REPOTTING cattleyas and laeliocattleyas W. H. White, orchid grower to Sir Trevor Lawrence, says to make use of plenty of dry fern rhizome from the pete as drainage material, especially for large plants, and over this place a layer of rough moss or peat to support the compost, which should consist of fibrous peat, leaf soil and sphagnum moss in equal parts, with some silver sand. It is necessary that those inexperienced in the use of this potting material should use care in watering, as I have found more plants ruined by over-watering than by any other cause.

THERE IS MUCH greater danger of overmanuring than of under-manuring roses in benches. If there are indications of over-feeding, sow on the beds some quick-growing grass, such as Poa annua, that will take out some of the excess plant food; also give a liberal coating of gypsum or quick-lime (slaked), which will counteract an excess of soluble nitrogeneous food.

PLACE A FEW old plants of Euphorbia (Poinsettia) pulcherrima in the stove house to provide cuttings for an early batch of plants if required, and afford them a watering. When the growths are from three to four inches in length, take them off with a heel, and insert them singly in small pots filled with sandy soil. Afford a watering, and plunge the pots in the propagating-frame, or on a hotbed.

A GARDENER has obtained compensation at the Gloucester County Court under unusual circumstances. On June 2 last year, while in the act of picking up leaves from the lawn, his face came in contact with the point of a leaf of Agave Americana. The spine entered the ball of his left eye, inflicting injuries from which he has not yet recovered. His employer had insured her servants against accident, and the company paid the injured man 10s. per week compensation for a time, discontinuing to do so upon a medical man having certified that the gardener was fit for work again. After hearing counsel on both sides, his honor awarded claimant 10s. 6d. a week and half the value of the occupation of the house, assessed at £16 a year. Richings was earning £1 1s. per week at the time of the accident, and had a free house on the premises.

A BONE MEAL SUIT.

The following is reprinted from the Journal of Elizabeth, N. J., for May 25:

The Elizabeth Nursery Co., in a suit now on in Circuit Court, before Judge Vail, seeks to recover damages from the Lister Agricultural Works, of Newark, for the loss of plants which the local concern claims was due to a fertilizer it purchased of the defendant.

The nursery company has for the past six years made a specialty of rose plants, and four of its thirteen greenhouses are used for that purpose alone. In order to enrich the soil the nursery company last June directed the Lister Agricultural Chemical Co. to send it a half ton of its grade of fertilizer known as Lister's Pure Raw Bone Meal. When the company ordered the half ton of fertilizer, it had one bag and a half of the same brand on hand left over from January previous. This the company made use of in greenhouse No. 6, and on receiving the half ton used five of the six bags in the other three houses set apart for rose plants. In each of the four houses were 4,500 rose cuttings, making in all 13,500 plants, and in addition to that there were 10,000 3 and 4-inch pot plants.

George Regg, superintendent of the nursery, claims that a week after the new fertilizer had been used the leaves of the plants began to turn yellow, and in two weeks they began to die, while in greenhouse No. 6, where the old fertilizer had been used, the plants thrived and not one of them died. That of the 13,500 plants in the other three houses, 9,500 died, and of the 10,000 3 and 4-inch pot plants, only 500 lived. The plaintiff claims that on having the fertilizer examined it was found to be only half bone, the remainder muriate of potash, which even in exceedingly small proportions, is injurious to rose plants. As a result of their loss the nursery people, instead of sending out roses this spring, have been buying in plants, paying as high as 25 cents a plant, in order to restock their houses.

The defense is that the fertilizer sent the nursery company was the same as previously used and that when it left the works was just what it was represented to be. The loss to the company is laid to alleged want of care.

The defendant is represented by McCarter-Williamson & McCarter, the head of which is the attorney-general. Richard V. Lindabury, and Frederick J. Faulks, of Lindaburg, Depue & Faulks, of New York, are looking after the nursery's interests.

A Great Acquisition.

The best of all ferns for cut fronds.
Brings the highest prices.
The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell.

Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country.

BUY NOW.
Buy liberally and reap the benefits.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM originated at Utica, N. Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets and has created a great demand for it.

The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all Adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it.

Will be ready to ship JULY 1st, 1904, out of 3-inch pots, strong plants, at the following prices:
$5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000.
25 at 100 rate; 250 at 1000 rate.

The following firms also act as General Agents for this new Adiantum, and orders may be supplied through them:

MILWAUKEE.

Decoration day trade surpassed all previous records. Ninety per cent of the orders called for carnations almost exclusively and the supply was soon exhausted, when everything else in salable shape was cleaned up. There were plenty of roses, jasmines, lilies, peonies, valley and sweet peas to go around. Carnations were about the only shortage. Good prices were realized and even poor grades of flowers went at fair figures.

The demand for bedding plants was very heavy, but the season being unusually late this year much planting is still to be done.

In the midst of the rush the C. C. Pollworth Co. received a car load of palms from Belgium, which came through in excellent shape.

There was no pickled stock on the market, as most of the growers had heavy crops on and the cut was about the average.

PUEBLO, COLO.

One of the worst hail storms in the history of Pueblo visited the city on Friday, May 20, totally destroying every greenhouse in the city. G. Fleischer, the largest grower, had almost every light smashed, as reported in last week's Review, and his fine stock of pot plants, between 40,000 and 50,000, almost totally ruined, besides his carnations and roses, which are a complete loss. Mr. Fleischer had 18,000 feet of glass. J. O. Zimmerman, Mrs. Latshaw and McMurray & Wallace suffered in a similar way. Mrs. Baker and J. Thomas, vegetable growers, are just as bad off. At Fleischer's the hail measured seven inches in circumference. Big, twisted lumps of ice with blue centers came down like Japanese shot and in two minutes every light in the place was gone. Fleischer has the finest and most up-to-date place in this section.

Times have been very dull here this winter and when there was a little money in sight down comes the hail and everything is "N. G."

AMERICAN BEAUTY—Certificate C.S.A.

Originated in this country three years ago. It has shown to possess all the qualities required of a first-class commercial Chrysanthemum. Clean, healthy growth, 3½ to 4 feet high, good stem and foliage, every flower coming good under ordinary culture. Form of flower ideal, being closely incurved and high built. Keeping and shipping qualities excellent: color a beautiful dark pink, uniform in every flower. Flowering time November 20th and later. Price 50c each, $5.00 per dozen, $30.00 per hundred. For other varieties ask for list. Cash with order.

TO-BAK-INE

SCARBOROUGH, N. Y., February 3, 1904.

"We wish to say that your To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper is the most satisfactory agent for the destruction of Green fly that has ever been brought to our notice. It is clean, quickly applied and effective. As you know, we have been heavy buyers of this product, all of which has been used in our own greenhouses. And as 'actions speak louder than words' we think no further recommendation on our part is necessary."

HERE IS A BUSINESS BOOK FOR BUSINESS MEN

NO SCIENCE BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE.

It don't tell you the botanical classification but it does tell you how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

It don't list every plant in cultivation but it does tell you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

The articles are arranged alphabetically so that when you want to see what Mr. Scott says about Cannas you turn to the Cs and in an instant you have it.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The book treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

It is a book that you need in your business just as you need any other useful labor and money saving implement or device.

The price is $5.00, carriage prepaid.

If you have not already obtained a copy of this book order one now.

If you cannot spare the full price at once, write us for our monthly payment offer.

HERE IS A BUSINESS BOOK FOR BUSINESS MEN

NO SCIENCE BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE.

It don't tell you the botanical classification but it does tell you how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

It don't list every plant in cultivation but it does tell you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

The articles are arranged alphabetically so that when you want to see what Mr. Scott says about Cannas you turn to the Cs and in an instant you have it.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The book treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

It is a book that you need in your business just as you need any other useful labor and money saving implement or device.

The price is $5.00, carriage prepaid.

If you have not already obtained a copy of this book order one now.

DENVER.

Denver seems to have struck a prosperous streak. Heretofore the year for presidential election has invariably been a poor one for the florists, but this spring the people are spending their money more freely for luxuries and spring trade has had a very significant increase over previous years. Although stock has not been up to the standard, the demand for exterior house decorations in the line of porch and window boxes has increased and some of the florists are catering to that line of the trade with all the force they possess.

Memorial day business has been very good and everything available outside as well as indoors has been utilized for wreath and bunch work. The general public is getting to use flowers more extensively on this occasion and the florists are kept guessing as to what they can fill orders with. Many of the perennials and shrubs have proven quite a help in this line of work, particularly peonies, iris, snowballs and bridal wreath spiræa. Mountain-towns at an elevation of over 7,000 feet have little if any outdoor flowers and Denver is drawn on heavily for anything and everything in the floral line.

Public improvements in the city parks are going on extensively and Superintendent Graham is looking forward to continuous improvements under the new municipal administration.

Albert Mauff, who is one of the youngsters of the profession out here and who has grown up from childhood in our midst, has been honored with a seat in the City Council and the fraternity to which he belongs are expecting from him a forcible representation of the profession in public affairs pertaining to floriculture. GREAT DIVIDE.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—The order for the plants for the city bedding was divided between Walker & McLean, Gus Geng and Mansfield Milton.

LORDSTOWN, O.—George Richardson, the water lily specialist, will have a large display at the St. Louis World's Fair. He was in charge of the aquatics at the Chicago exposition eleven years ago.

CLEVELAND, O.—Parties interested in the re-organization of the Grant-Wilson Floral Co., which has been in the hands of a receiver for some months are acquiring claims at 50 cents on the dollar, through Attorney C. W. Fuller.

LARNED, KANS.—This town is very much in need of a commercial florists' establishment, as was demonstrated at the recent commencement. There is talk of interesting some good grower with a little money and forming a stock company among the town people to supply the necessary capital. Tyra Montgomery, the nurseryman, handles cut flowers and plants as a side line but will drop them if someone starts a greenhouse here.

"Absolutely safe and reliable. Ask your friends."

Distance No Bar.

We have had several letters from florists in different parts of the country stating that they would like to buy our outfits but consider that they are too far away from Louisville to be able to do so advantageously. This is not the fact. There is no state in this country that has not at least several of our plants. They are so made as to be readily shipped and can be put together by any intelligent workman.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

GREENHOUSE INSURANCE.

"It isn't so very long ago that an insurance man would shy clear across the street when he saw the word 'greenhouse,'" said Henry W. Magill, of the Phoenix of Hartford, in a recent conversation, "and even now they prick up their ears when the word appears."

"Up to the last few years the experience of every company writing greenhouse property was the reverse of satisfactory; the construction was faulty, the hazard great, and in consequence rates were so high as to be almost prohibitive, say from three to five per cent, while many risks were refused altogether. That most companies are now writing more greenhouse insurance than heretofore, and at materially lower rates, is due entirely to improved methods of construction. And even now in the general offices of most insurance companies greenhouse risks are accepted with reluctance and only in limited amount; for instance the Phœnix will write no more than $1,500 on any one range even under the most favorable circumstances."

"I doubt if any of the representative companies would care to go on record as looking for greenhouse business," said the chief examiner in the general office of one of the big Brooklyn companies and, withal, one of the most liberal. "Yet they are all writing more or less of such risks, because of improved conditions, and it may safely be set down that where a greenhouse owner cannot get insurance through the agents in his own town it is because of conditions which make that particular risk one of extra hazard."

January 23, 1903, the Chicago Underwriters' Association issued a new schedule on greenhouse property which was equivalent to a reduction in rates of about thirty-three and one-third per cent, "because of the better character of the buildings and greater attention to those matters which have to do with the reduction of the hazard," says H. H. Glidden, manager of the association, which is a clearing house for all insurance business in Cook county and the counterpart of many similar associations throughout the United States.

It must be understood that insurance practices are pretty much the same throughout the United States but that rates are variable. For instance, the rates in general increase slightly from east to west, because of what insurance men call the "moral hazard," it being argued that the farther west one goes the greater is the inclination of the people toward speculative enterprise and other things calculated to upset the mathematical principles on which the insurance business is conducted. Then, too, rates vary in different communities because of the expense of doing business, because of good or inefficient fire protection and for other reasons. But of far greater importance in influence on the cost of insurance are the details which contribute to the increase or decrease of what the insurance man calls the "hazard" in each individual case. In cases of this kind the agent has no predetermined rate, as he has for dwellings, stores, etc., but the rate is fixed by the rating officer of the district according to the conditions of each individual case as reported by the inspector.

It therefore behooves every florist to examine his greenhouse plant with a view to remedying those conditions which are making his insurance more costly than is necessary, or perhaps preventing his getting his risk accepted by any reliable company.

While, as has been said, details vary in different localities, principles are the same and a study of the schedule in use by the Chicago Underwriters' Association will afford an index to the procedure and a key to the points to be observed in new buildings or in making changes. The schedule is reproduced herewith. The Association has a map showing practically all buildings in its territory, their location, "exposures," etc. On receipt of an application for a rating on unrated property the superintendent sends out a surveyor, or inspector, who reports on all details of construction and any fact of conditions not shown on the map. On his report the rate is based.

It will be noted that the boiler must "be safely set in a brick room." Failure to observe this point is likely to make the rate prohibitive or to result in causing the risk to be declined altogether. If the houses have brick walls, iron gutters or iron bars the rate may be reduced accordingly. Proper clearance of steam pipes is required in all cases, also safe lighting. Then the basis for the rate is $1, that is, one per cent of the amount of the policy, provided there be not over 10,000 feet in the range. If over 10,000 feet the rate is 5 cents higher for each additional 5,000 feet.

If the boiler is in a frame building, or if in the main building, the rate is advanced 25 cents on each $100 of insurance. If the stack is of metal and passes through the roof the rate goes up 15 cents more and if the steam pipes have not proper clearance from wood another 15 cents is added. These charges seem well grounded, for the history of greenhouse fires shows that practically all originate in the boiler shed, and it is only the part of prudence to go to some little expense to fireproof it. Indeed, in many places recently built, especially in the east, the heating plant is in a detached fireproof building.

Location _____

STANDARD—House frame not exceeding 10,000 square feet of ground area. Heating by hot water or low pressure steam, apparatus to be safely set in a brick room. Steam pipes to have proper clearance from wood. Lighting, electric, gas or approved lanterns. Occupancy greenhouse only. Basis	$1.00
NOTE—If structure, except heater room, be of brick or part brick the superintendent of ratings may reduce the basis proportionately.
AREA—For each additional 5,000 square feet or larger fractional part thereof, add	.05
HEATING—If in frame room, or in main building, add	.25
If stack or chimney of metal and passes roof add not less than	.15
If steam heat used and piping has not proper clearance from wood, add not less than	.15
If fire heat (flue) used, add not less than	1.00
LIGHTING—If other than electric, gas or approved lanterns, add not less than	.15
EXPOSURES—Add at discretion.
OCCUPANCY—If occupied for other than the raising or potting of plants, add according to hazard at discretion.
Charge for stable occupancy not to be less than	.25
PROTECTION—If not provided with barrels of water and pails, hose service or fire extinguishers as required, add not less than	.25
If not well under public fire protection, add not less than	.25
BUILDING RATE
CONTENTS—Except plants in frame buildings to rate same as building. In brick, and brick and frame buildings 25 cents more than building. Plants to rate $1.00 more than building in all cases.

NOTE—All dwellings and barns exposed by greenhouses within 50 feet to be specifically rated at the discretion of the superintendent of ratings.

Greenhouses and contents to be classed as now, ordinary business, both as to term rates and commissions.

Surveyed _____ 190 _____ SURVEYOR.

NOTE—Surveyor, on the back of this sheet will give Diagram, if not on Map, Exposures, condition of Risks and Requests for Improvements.

Practically all greenhouses have a hose instantly available; if not other protection must be provided or the rate goes up another 25 cents. If the greenhouses are outside the public fire protection the rate is increased at the discretion of the superintendent. If used for any other purpose than as a greenhouse the rate increases, a stable attached costing not less than 25 cents each year on each $100 of insurance.

In the matter of exposures the florist frequently has no control, but he can at least see that his own stable and other outbuildings are a safe distance from the greenhouses. Buildings across a sixty-foot street may or may not be counted as exposures according to whether or not they are of themselves poor fire risks. But buildings close to a greenhouse, as on the same lot, adjoining or across an alley, add to the hazard. Distance governs, but of course a blacksmith shop is a greater danger than an ice house, a stable worse than a dwelling. In any event the rating officer adds to the premium charge according to his discretion.

The rate on the contents of greenhouse structures is, according to this schedule, in all cases to be $1 higher than on the buildings themselves.

The Chicago Underwriters' Association has published for its members a list of ratings on many classes of buildings and on many large properties, including several greenhouse plants. The rate on the Peter Reinberg greenhouse establishment, figured on this schedule, is $2.15 per annum per $100 of insurance, a rate materially lower than in comparatively recent years and a rate which Mr. Reinberg will still farther reduce this year by virtue of the excellent methods of construction he is employing in rebuilding the seventeen houses in the oldest section of his plant.

THE USE OF BONE MEAL.

The question of bone flour as a fertilizer for rose culture under glass is at the present time a very pertinent one, as the majority of growers will within the month be using it in large quantities.

Containing, as it does, many of the elements necessary to plant life and which roses in their confined quarters are debarred from seeking for themselves, it should be offered to the plants in as pure and assimilable form as possible. That pure bone flour when properly applied, is beneficial is without question, but how to secure the pure article is another question, and that the adulterated article, or the pure bone cut by poisonous acids is in every way unfit for this work is also unquestioned.

There are few rose growers who have been long enough in the business to show the silver threads in their locks, where any are left, but have had some unpleasant experience with these raw or low grade fertilizers and from such experience have learned to exercise caution even with the best recommended article. That caution is necessary is evidenced by the fact that there are still brands on the market which even in the hands of experts cannot be used with safety.

Some years ago I had the misfortune to handle a consignment of just such stuff and had the mortification of seeing my young stock shed the whole of their leaves within a week after being planted. A complaint to the firm supplying the material elicited the stereotyped reply that the material was of the same grade as formerly supplied and insinuated, of course, that the whole trouble was in the careless manner in which it had been applied. On reviewing the matter I could not see how it could, if of the same grade, act so differently on the plants when used in the same manner and quantities as formerly. Not being in a position to fight such a strong corporation I had to grin and bear it. I am glad, however, to see that one firm, the Elizabeth Nursery Co., of Elizabeth, N. J., who have had a similar experience, had the temerity to bring the question to an issue. The outcome of the case in their favor is of much importance to the trade.

Where the gases have no means of escape but must accumulate when the ventilators are shut, especially prepared bone should be secured from some reliable house in our own trade, as many of these chemical preparations from general fertilizer works, while safe enough when applied to field crops, where the gases can escape freely, are simply fatal when applied to greenhouse crops.

As a matter of safety I have for years provided the supply of this material some months previous to using, thus giving ample time to allow the deleterious gases to escape and during that period have had no trouble even when using it in large proportions.

While exercising as much care as possible to secure the pure article every other precaution should be used to eliminate the element of danger before applying it to the stock. Ribes.

THE ROSE BEETLE.

The rosebud curculio occurs very commonly on wild and cultivated roses in many parts of the country. The beetles are rather shy when discovered, and though their movements are not quick, they soon disappear under a leaf or stem when a person approaches. In common with many other insects, they have the habit of drawing in their legs when in danger and allowing themselves to drop to the earth, where they remain motionless for a short time, or until the danger has passed.

The colors found on the beetle are red and black. The wing covers, which make up the greater part of the upper surface of the body, and the thorax (prothorax) are red, while the head, including the beak or snout, the antennæ, the legs, and the entire under surface of the body are black. F. H. Chittenden, assistant entomologist in the United States Department of Agriculture, reports that in Colorado specimens are found in which the greater part of the head, legs and antennæ are red, like the upper surface of the body.

The beak or snout is long and slender, as indicated in the accompanying illustration (a and d). The antennæ are club-shaped and are attached near the middle of the snout, one on each side. The mouth parts are situated on the extreme end of the beak, and are made up of a number of pieces, the most formidable of which are the mandibles, which are toothed on both the inner and outer edge. The mouth parts viewed from beneath are illustrated (g). Exclusive of the beak the beetle measures a little less than one-fourth of an inch in length.

The injuries for which the species is responsible are done by the adult or beetle, and so far as is known by the writer, the larva does no harm to the plant in any way. The principal injury accomplished by the beetle is done by boring small, deep holes into the buds. Many holes are often bored into a single bud. Though such a bud may open, the resulting rose is of no value. Other buds cease to develop when eaten into, and soon wither and dry up. The beetles also bore holes into the stems of the roses at right angles to the axis. Buds affected in this way wilt, and hang from the stems, and later dry.

Complaints of the injuries caused by this beetle have reached the Experiment Station from various parts of the state. The injuries are scarcely less serious and extensive than those of the rose chafer (Macrodactylus subspinosus), in the eastern states, and a number of cases have come under the writer's attention in which persons have given up an attempt to grow roses on account of the injuries of this insect. Various writers have reported it as a troublesome pest on roses in widely separated parts of the United States. It occurs in the northern tier of states from ocean to ocean and as far south as Mexico.

The beetles appear early in June and continue until the latter part of August. The eggs are deposited in various places. Most of those found by the writer were in the buds, either in the unexpanded petals or in the young fruit. One egg was found in the tender extremity of a new cane and one in a cynipid gall. In all cases the eggs were found in the holes made with the beak, and were placed well down in the holes, below the surface. The form of the eggs is shown (c). They are semi-transparent and almost colorless. The eggs hatch in a few days, probably about a week or ten days. We have never been able to find larvæ except in the rose hip or fruit, and this is doubtless the normal place for their development.

The larva or grub (b) is yellowish white, with a rosy tint, and instead of being straight has the back arched. It has no legs. The head and mouth parts viewed from above are shown (f). We have never found the larvæ in abundance. A large plant bearing many hips seldom has more than two infested fruits, though many have the external mark that would indicate them to be infested.

The grubs finish feeding and disappear early in October.

In many cases hand picking is all that is necessary to get relief from the injuries caused by this pest. In a previous paragraph we have mentioned the fact that when disturbed the beetles drop to the ground. Taking advantage of this, one can catch the beetles by holding a pan containing kerosene underneath and causing the beetles to drop.

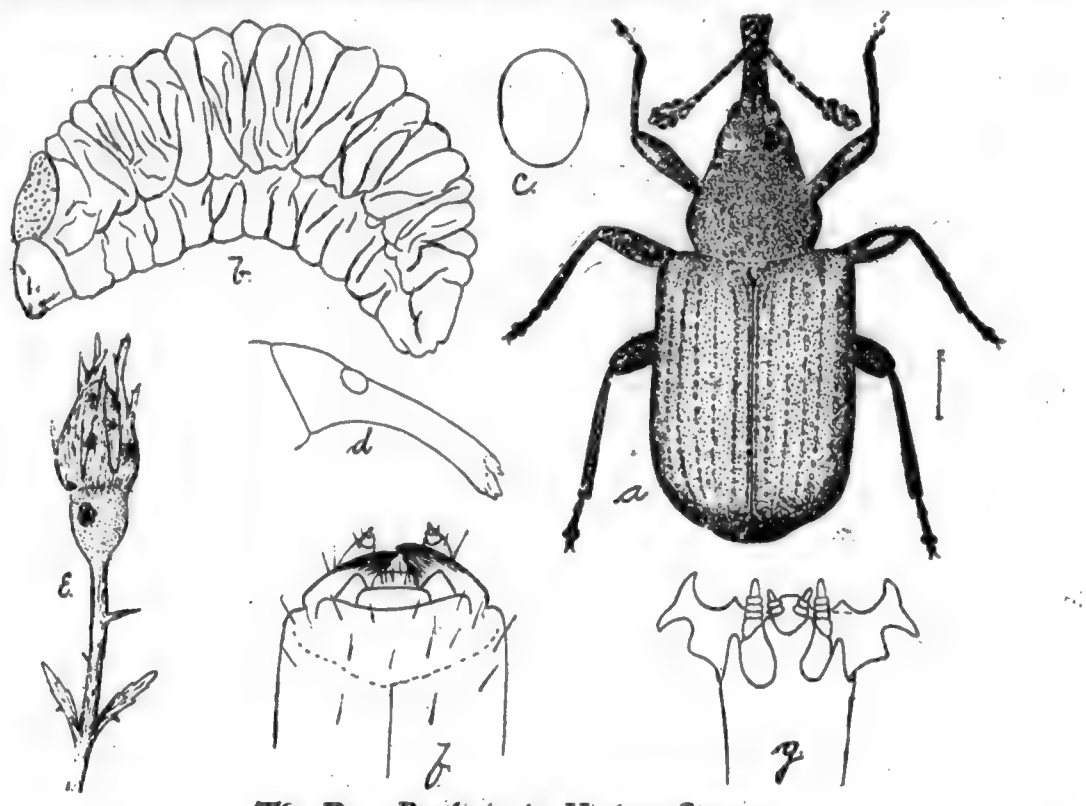
Under some conditions hand picking is a futile measure. When the cultivated roses to be protected are in the vicinity of wild roses which breed the beetles year after year, it will probably be useless to attempt hand picking. It is said that a spray of Paris green will kill the beetles.—R. A. COOLEY, in Bulletin of Montana Experiment Station.



RENEWING THE BENCH SOIL.

Some weeks ago an inquiry was sent to the REVIEW by an eastern professor who is rightly considered a high authority on matters pertaining to horticulture, particularly on soils, the most important of all. The question was about like this: "Why do florists consider it necessary to change or renew the soil on their benches every year, for the important crops, for instance, roses, carnations and chrysanthemums?" I regret very much that I cannot quote the exact text of the question, yet it makes little difference whether the question was "Why do they?" or "Why do they not?" The delay in answering is because the writer desired to have the opinions and views of men of large experience and of some who could speak from a knowledge of the chemistry of the soil.

Ask about ninety per cent of all the growers of greenhouse flowers of our staple kinds why they put fresh soil on their benches annually and the answer would be, if cornered to explain: "Well, I don't know, but it seems to me it is worn out, in poor condition, and I should be sorry to trust it the second year." These men answer without any specific knowledge, more on general principles, what they have always done and what their fathers have done, and they are largely right.

At the inception and birth of the American Carnation Society, at Philadelphia some years ago the question of renewing the soil on carnation benches was brought up and the writer was astonished to hear several growers from what was then known as the carnation belt, Chester county, Pa., (the belt, like the gulf stream, has deviated of late, spreading north, east and west till you would scarcely recognize the belt unless it was labeled) stand up and say that they did not change the soil for four or five years and did not think there was any necessity for doing so. Soil that has been used for one season, say for carnations, removed in June and allowed to remain out of doors the following winter and in the spring turned over and replenished with manure, bone, ashes or other fertilizers would, in my opinion, be entirely different from soil that simply had the growing crop removed and after a few days worked into the proper condition, with manure added, and then a new crop planted.

It may be possible with some of our flowers to restore to the soil all that is essential to their growth and vigor, yet I don't know what they are. It is a temptation, when short of time and material, to use the same old soil, or part of it, as we have done and if the result was fairly good you would be too apt to persuade yourself that old soil was good enough, forgetting that with equal care and all other conditions your carnations or chrysanthemums might have been much better. In the case of roses let me repeat the remark of a first-class rose grower. "We threw out our soil as usual and spread it out and seeded it to grass. Three or four years afterwards the boss says, 'Barney, that ought to be good enough.' I say, 'No, boss, I don't think so.' However, we did use it and our roses were very poor. It won't do. Give me soil that never grew roses."

A few of the principal reasons against using soil on our benches the second year are:

1. The plants have, from the limited amount of soil given them, taken from the soil the essential elements that nourish their growth. It may be possible to restore the elements artificially, but who could tell without a scientific analysis whether it was potash or phosphorous or ammonia that was needed?

2. By our treatment of the soil on the benches we have put it in the poorest mechanical condition. All vestige of fibre is gone and, although it is quite easy, with proper management, to put it again in a good working condition, it is too friable and lifeless for any of our important crops.

3. All our winter blooming bench crops are subject to many and varied diseases, such as fungi, rust, bacteria and insects. The spores and eggs of all these find a natural resting place in the soil and you can't expect to escape anything but a battle against them when you begin again with a young army ready to fight.

The above three reasons may not be conclusive in some people's opinion, but I must say, both from experience and observation, that it is unwise in the extreme to use the soil the second year on our shallow benches for either roses, carnations, chrysanthemums or violets. The farmer and market gardener rotates his crops even where he has the blessings of frost and snow and the natural atmosphere. How much more essential is it for us to use fresh soil where our conditions are most artificial, where we drench the beds continually with water and endeavor to extract from the soil and put into the plant all we possibly can. WILLIAM SCOTT.

BEDDING GERANIUMS.

Please answer us this question through the columns of the REVIEW. What are the best bedding sorts of geraniums, all colors? I. S. C.

I am inclined to think that an authority like the E. G. Hill Co., who import all the new varieties annually and doubtless give them a trial before sending them out, could give you a more up-to-date list of desirable zonale bedding geraniums. The Frenchmen and some English firms send out every year many varieties, yet, like the chrysanthemums and carnations and other florists' flowers, the great majority fall by the wayside and if there are one or two novelties of sterling merit in a year it is all we expect. Zonale geraniums (pelargoniums, as they are properly called in Europe) are largely grown there for conservatory decoration and for that purpose many of the single varieties are most beautiful, but useless for our purpose as summer bedding plants. Here is a short list of varieties that can be depended on to grow and bloom with great success the entire season.

S. A. Nutt, dark scarlet; Le Soleil, dark scarlet. These are very alike, yet I think Le Soleil is a little the better and the finest all-around zonale we grow and the public seems to like that shade better than any. Alphonse Ricard, a light scarlet, splendid floret and truss; John Doyle, bright scarlet, a little darker than Ricard; Frances Perkins, the best of all pinks. This has entirely superseded the old favorite Emile de Girardin. Beauty Poitevine, a beautiful salmon; Glorie de Paris, a peach blossom pink, good for vases; La Favorite, a very free flowering white; Ernest Louth, a very old, but fine variety not unlike the color of Lawson carnation; Countess de Harcourt, a very fine white; Marquis de Castellane, a grand red; Jean Viaud.

This latter is such a splendid flower at selling time that I have added it to the list, yet it is with us rather disappointing when used as a bedder, not flowering freely enough. All of the above are semi-double. Our experience is that if we have 30,000 geraniums in 4-inch pots in the spring, about half of them ought to be S. A. Nutt of Le Soleil. Nine people out of ten, if they want a red or scarlet, will say "that's my color." If your patronage consists of a good many old ladies who love posies and like to select a dozen geraniums you may need to grow twenty or thirty varieties, but if you cart them to the market by the wagon load or fill flower beds that may take 150 plants of one variety, then about half a dozen of the very best varieties will suffice and you have less to think about and will grow them better. THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

COLOR HINTS.—III.

Harmony and Window Work.

Two or more colors to be harmonious must warm up to each other, seem to run into each other, not bluntly but easily and softly, without any very distinct line of connection. Here is another way to tell whether there is a connection between two colors: If unable to trace the coloring with a true eye, observe the colored shadow which the darker or more brilliant color throws upon the lighter. If the shadow seems to develop the same color in the lighter, you have found the harmony. If on the other hand, there is no tuning up as it were, in the lighter or if the shade or brilliant color becomes dulled, there is no harmony.

All this may not sound very much like shop talk but, viewed in the best sense, is valuable. Color harmony is attractive, whether people are conscious of it or not. The rudest, as well as the cultured, are influenced by it. A knowledge of color is certainly very practical for the florist. A finely colored window, other things being equal, cannot help but attract. I have seen windows piled up in tiers with quantities of valuable stock, massed in with a total disregard of the fighting qualities of salmon pink crowded against scarlet, backed up with purple and orange and flanked with an array of jardinieres terrible to contemplate. One quarter of this material wisely used would serve a better purpose and spare the eyesight of the onlookers.

In Decorating.

Don't be afraid of brilliant coloring and striking contrasts. The lack of such taste is no sign of an artist, but be careful how you combine. In viewing a room to plan for a decoration, always consider first the colors of the finishings and furnishings. If you find a room in oriental reds and blues, use delicate pink; if terra cotta, use yellow and cream; if mahogany color, use green liberally; if cherry or black walnut or ebony, use pink, or pink and rich cream; if light green, use rose pink as seen in Lawson carnations, scarlet or crimson. There should be some sort of connection between the background color, as in a wall, and the material with which we decorate the room.

But do not let the colors be very near alike. For instance, I once went to put up a wedding decoration of wild smilax, and to my dismay found that the walls were green, almost the color of the smilax. The smilax never would show on a background so very much like its own color. The only thing to do was to manufacture a lighter background. So I called for a plain lace net curtain and stretched it on the wall first. This lightened the sober green of the wall, and at the same time made enough of a contrast to bring out the coloring and graceful design of the smilax sprays, while there was yet enough of the green of the background still apparent to establish the connection and the harmony.

Colors for Funeral Work.

For elderly people, there are no more appropriate colors than purple, crimson, dark blues and rich deep greens. For younger people, light violet and pink should predominate, with light yellow. For children, use white with a suggestion of pink, in small delicate flowers, not forgetting the softening effect of fine cut light green foliage.

In selecting the color for a funeral design, follow the natural coloring as far as possible. Why shouldn't a heart be crimson rather than white, or a cross of some warm color? A pillow may be well worked out in white and green, while a shield should be red, white and blue, of course. An anchor always works out well in pink as suggestive of its sentiment. A wreath or a basket perhaps admits of as wide a range of coloring as any design commonly made.

A COLORADO ESTABLISHMENT.

The accompanying illustrations will give an idea of the character of the establishment of William Henry Evans, of Colorado Springs, Colo. One of the photographs shows the office and sales room with a glimpse of the greenhouse range showing in the rear. The other illustration is from a photograph taken in a house of miscellaneous stock, the dimensions of the structure being 30x90. The photograph was taken just before Easter. There are about 25,000 square feet of glass in the establishment and, as they are having a considerable demand from wholesale customers, they are now adding two more houses and hope before long to double their capacity. Edward Johnson is the greenhouse manager. The houses supply the retail store of the Colorado Springs Floral Co., of which Mr. Evans is president and Wm. S. McCartney treasurer.

STEM ROT OF ASTERS.

Asters are grown from seed sown under glass in early spring or in the open ground later in the season. The young plants are pricked out into pots, flats or cold frames when large enough and later set out in the open bed. They flourish well in almost any soil, but respond in a marked degree to an increased amount of fertility. Their best development is obtained in a moderately moist, well-drained soil, rich in organic matter and plant food.

This plant has suffered in recent years to a marked extent from a variety of troubles, which have in some cases caused its abandonment by professional growers, says Ralph E. Smith in a bulletin of the Hatch Experiment Station. One of the worst diseases and one which makes its appearance sometimes within a few days after planting may be called "wilt" or "stem rot," and is now perhaps the most common and destructive disease of the aster. It has been known for some time but has greatly increased in abundance during the past few years, being more generally prevalent during the summer of 1901 than ever before. Professor Galloway states that it is caused by a fungus which enters the plant near the surface of the ground and fills up the water vessels of the stem, thus causing the plant to wilt and finally die.

This disease is readily recognized by one familiar with it. It first appears soon after the plants are set out in the bed and is generally prevalent from that time on throughout the season, but is most noticeable at two periods, the setting of the plants and the time of blooming. Complaints of this trouble are most abundant from the latter part of July to the middle of August, as it is during this period that most of it appears.

Those who examine closely find that the stem of the plant just at the surface of the ground is badly rotted and evidently the seat of the difficulty, the hard inner woody portion only remaining. This, however, is the final stage of the disease, which may be recognized much earlier. Its effects are always seen first upon one side of the plant, usually in one of the lower leaves and almost always in one-half of the leaf. Here the normal color begins to turn to a dull yellowish green. Soon this is apparent up and down the whole length of the plant, but still on one side, a wilting, fading, "blighting" effect. At the top of the plant the leaves on the affected side are somewhat smaller than the others, while further down they gradually droop and die away. The whole appearance is very characteristic, one side of the plant having the dull-green, wilted, blighted appearance with only one-half of many of the leaves affected at first. When the disease is prevalent many plants take on this appearance and die soon after being set out in the bed. Often a large lot will be a total loss before developing a bloom. In other cases plants in which the symptoms are apparent, but not so strongly marked, will throw out branches, form buds and develop a few feeble flowers before entirely perishing. Again it is very common for plants which appear healthy up to the time of blooming to throw out a normal crop of flowers, then suddenly show the characteristic blight, wilt and dry up in a very short time. In all these cases the disease is the same.

If affected plants in the earlier stages of the disease are pulled up and examined no indication of injury can be seen except in the wilted, dying lower leaves. The roots and stem appear perfectly sound and healthy. It is only on cutting open the stem, just at the surface of the ground, that the seat of the trouble is found. Here will be found a dark discoloration in the outer edge of the harder, woody portion of the stem, where it joins the soft "bark" which covers it. At first this is only a small spot on the affected side, but may always be found when the exterior symptoms have begun to appear. This discoloration spreads around and up the stem, always in the woody portion at first, but finally the soft outer part is affected and rots away, leaving the wood intact, though it was the first portion to be attacked. By this time the plant is dead so that if first examined at this stage the stem is found in the condition described.

The cause of this trouble may readily be found with the microscope. This is seen to the best advantage in a plant in the earlier stages of the disease where the outer green cortex of the stem is still sound. By examining a thin section of the discolored woody portion it will be seen that the discoloration is confined mostly to the large vessels or pores through which the water passes up from the roots. These are still intact and uninjured, but in the interior of most of those which are already affected as shown by the darker color, there will be seen a mass of fungous growth which completely plugs up the opening and evidently prevents the free passage of water or sap through the vessel.

Greenhouse at Plant of W. H. Evans, Colorado Springs, Colo.

The important question now arises, where does this fungus come from and how does it attack the plant? The solution of this point underlies the whole problem of preventing or treating the disease. A particular case may be described. In the spring of 1900 we planted a large amount of aster seed in flats in a greenhouse. The seed was planted quite thickly, so that the plants after coming up stood very close together in the rows. A long period of wet, cloudy weather followed and soon the trouble known as "damping off" set in quite abundantly. As soon as possible the plants were pricked out, saving only the best. Many more rotted off after this, so that when the permanent beds were set out on June 8 many varieties were very poorly represented. It was noticeable in the flats that many plants showed a trouble, evidently a continuation of the damping off in the seed bed. In many cases, however, an apparent recovery took place. In some lots of badly affected seedlings almost every plant showed at the time of pricking out a small dark spot on the stem, from which the rotting proceeded. In those which appeared to recover a callus tissue grew over this spot, becoming a sort of scab and appearing to check the decay of the stem. By carefully following the individual plants it was found that these were the plants which showed the wilt disease after being set out. The fungus in all these cases was the same. This is an important point, namely, that the disease was contracted in the seed bed as a result of conditions which favor damping off.

Acting upon this idea comparisons were constantly made between plants started in the greenhouse which damped off more or less and those which were started in the open ground and kept in vigorous growth from the first. The development of individual plants and typical lots of plants, affected and unaffected, was carefully followed up, with the result that in every case where plants died from stem rot after being set out in the bed, even though in many instances no trouble showed itself until the time of blossoming, the disease came from the seed bed and was not contracted by healthy plants after being set out in the field.

Our own plants have been started each year in the same house, the same flats and possibly to some extent in the same soil. It seems almost certain that the germs of this fungus are thoroughly established here; at any rate the trouble has steadily increased from none in 1899 to almost every plant in 1901, while each year plants started out of doors, set out in the same beds and often in ground occupied by diseased plants the previous year have shown no trouble of this sort whatever. The past season when the greenhouse-started plants were almost all killed sooner or later by the stem rot, our large bed presented a most instructive appearance. At one end was a large block of plants started out of doors. Here and there through the bed were a few other rows of similar plants. The rest of the field had been set with greenhouse plants. By the time that blooming was well under way scarcely a plant remained alive in the whole bed except in the portions set with outdoor plants, and here not a single plant showed this blight.

Plainly the avoidance of this disease lies in starting with healthy plants, grown out of doors or in cold frames, rather than in the greenhouse where the conditions are more favorable to damping off. Of course many good plants are started in greenhouses, but the disease is rapidly increasing in prevalence and appears to start almost invariably from such conditions. Plants started out of doors are insured against this trouble, and, though perhaps a little later, may easily be brought to full development at the normal season.

As regards time of blooming there is no marked advantage in obtaining very early plants, with the possible exception of Queen of the Market and similar extra early varieties. Plant the seed in good soil out of doors as early as the ground can be thoroughly worked, in a place where asters have never grown before. Thin out the young plants if necessary, transplant to the permanent bed as soon as they are large enough and when conditions are favorable, and, so far as stem rot is concerned, no trouble need be feared.

ASPARAGUS PLUMOSUS.

Will some one please tell me through the REVIEW why my seeds of Asparagus plumosus nanus germinate so slowly this year? I have never let the beds get dry and am very careful not to overwater them. I am also careful not to let a crust form on the soil. I keep the temperature as near 80 degrees as possible. I planted the seed one inch deep in rather poor field soil, well sifted and the beds get the sun all day. The seeds were planted the last week in March. S. B. R.

You may have had the bad luck to get hold of poor seed, too ancient to germinate. The best advice I can give you now is to remove all that poor soil that you smothered the seed with, take it off and try and leave only just enough to cover the seed. Next time you sow asparagus first procure it of some good, reliable firm. Soak the seed for twenty-four hours in warm water. Then sow it evenly on a smooth surface and cover with sifted sod, just enough to cover the seeds. There is no need of the hades temperature of 80 degrees; 60 degrees is plenty warm enough, and don't let the sun shine till the young plants are well up through the soil. Quality of soil would make no difference to the starting of the seed, but why not choose a light loam, made better still with the addition of sifted leaf-mold or very decayed manure? W. S.

S. A. F. TRADE DISPLAY.

The following are extracts from the revised rules for the management of the S. A. F. trade display:

The superintendent shall furnish the society, through the secretary thereof, a list of the exhibitors and exhibits by 1 p. m. on the day of opening the convention. He shall also furnish the secretary with a list of novelties and new devices submitted for awards, said list to be for the use of the judges.

Exhibitors showing novelties or improved devices which they wish to have examined by the judges for such special notice or award as they may be deemed worthy of, shall make an itemized entry thereof with the superintendent in advance.

The president shall appoint, not less than one month in advance of the convention, three judges who shall examine specially entered exhibits and make detailed report thereon promptly to the secretary on the afternoon of the first day of the convention.

For exhibits deemed worthy thereof diplomas of three grades may be given, as follows: Certificate of Merit, Honorable Mention, Highly Commended.

No distinction as "First," "Second," "Best," or "Largest," or other mention indicating comparisons with other exhibits shall be made, and diplomas of equal value may be awarded to several exhibits in the same class.

Those intending to exhibit should apply to C. A. Kuehn, 1122 Pine street, St. Louis, for a complete copy of the rules.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Nathan Smith & Son offer the following special prize for the Boston chrysanthemum show: $25 cash for the best twelve white chrysanthemums, of American or foreign origin, of a variety disseminated in 1904; to be judged from a commercial standpoint; stems, not less than thirty inches long; open to private gardeners only.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM.

The fact that Peter Crowe, of Utica, who had been very successful at rose growing, found it profitable to give up that line to devote his time entirely to adiantum has no doubt had its effect upon the sale of the variety which is identified with his name and which is shortly to be distributed to the trade by Wm. F. Kasting, of Buffalo. The variety Croweanum originated in a batch of Adiantum cuneatum which Mr. Crowe purchased a good many years ago from Alex Montgomery, at Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass. It is naturally of slower reproduction than a rose or carnation and Mr. Crowe has been many years working up a stock and selling the cut fronds in the wholesale markets of New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo and Boston. He found it a much better seller than the old cuneatum and Mr. Kasting in handling the cut fronds recognized it as a most valuable novelty. He therefore made a contract with Mr. Crowe for the purchase of a portion of the stock, with certain reservations as to the time in which he might be the sole distributor. Mr. Kasting has appointed a number of the leading seed and plant houses throughout the country as general agents for his novelty and reports a very large sale in all directions. Every grower of "green goods" for the wholesale market is trying Croweanum and hundreds of growers for the retail trade are also taking it up, as it makes a very fine pot plant and is reputed to have wonderful qualities of endurance when exposed to the trying conditions of the dwelling room.

PENNSYLVANIA PREMIUMS.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society will hold its annual exhibition November 8 to 12 this year and has issued the premium list in pamphlet form. This is one of the societies which provides liberally for the plant classes, silver medals and money premiums ranging up to $50 being offered for specimen blooming and foliage plants and for groups. On cut chrysanthemums there are many classes, some of which are restricted to amateurs or private gardeners only, with liberal premiums. On the second day of the exhibition roses, carnations and violets will be the features. For twenty-five blooms of tea roses, premiums of $5 and $3 are offered; for twelve Beauties, the first premium is $25 and for best vase of fifty blooms of a variety not yet disseminated the first premium is $30. A silver cup is offered for the best American seedling not yet disseminated. On the third day of the exhibition floral arrangements will be the feature. For mantel decorations there are premiums of $20 and $10; for table decorations without bloom there are premiums of $25 and $15, for dinner table decoration with plants or flowers $50 and $30. There are also premiums for baskets and plateaus of flowers. The list also includes the premium offers on fruits and vegetables, most of them donated by the Philadelphia seedsmen.

DORCHESTER, MASS.

Death of L. H. Foster.

Lucius H. Foster died at his home here May 31 after an illness of several months. He suffered an apoplectic stroke last fall but was thought to be gaining until recently, when his condition took a turn for the worse. Mr. Foster was in the prime of life. The last time he was seen by the majority of his friends in the trade was at the S. A. F. meeting at Milwaukee, when he appeared in the most robust health and good for many years to come. His death, though not unexpected since his illness, comes as a shock. Mr. Foster had a large business and was widely known in the trade, his name being associated with the nephrolepis, Anna Foster, named for his wife, sent out from his establishment a couple of years ago.

Lucius H. Foster was born in Dorchester, Mass., 57 years ago and was the son of Joseph Warren Foster, one of the pioneer market gardeners of New England in the early 40's. He was educated in the public schools of Boston and graduated from the high school with high honors and was always interested, even when quite young, in plants and flowers, receiving good, solid instruction in floriculture from his father, which proved a great benefit to him in after years. Mr. Foster will be remembered as a partner in the firm of Calder & Otis Co., of Boston, not many years ago and also as a florist at Saratoga, N. Y., several years ago. Always looking to improve his knowledge in floriculture he started in business for himself, taking his brother as a partner and renting the greenhouses from their father, making a success of their business by constant attention, honest dealings and upright manhood, which advanced him to the top of the ladder in the florist business, which he loved. He will be remembered as being the first man to grow the old Bon Silene rose on its own roots in this country, receiving the highest price for that rose that was ever heard of up to that time. He will be remembered as the violet king of the east, only a few years ago being one of the largest growers of Marie Louise violets in New England, of which few are grown here now, and only a few years ago he was acknowledged the king pin grower of the Daybreak carnation on which he received several prizes, and for the past eight years he has been the largest grower of Boston ferns in the east, and nothing but praise can be said of his stock. And, again, he is originator of the prize winning Anna Foster fern, of which we all know and hear so much, having named it after his beloved wife now deceased. Mr. Foster was at one time president of the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Boston and also a member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. He leaves one daughter, Miss Edith P. Foster, for whom the well known Edith P. Foster carnation is named. Mr. Foster was a man of broad views and was always willing to help and advance others, instructing his hire to do the same and by his death the trade has lost a noble soul, one we could look to as an example in education for the future advancement of the many in our profession. He fought a good fight but still lives in our memory.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business has been disappointing since Thursday of last week. The hot weather of Saturday, Sunday and Monday took life out of the flowers and out of the flower lovers as well. Locally things were decidedly flat. They revived somewhat by the middle of the week, the demand being more brisk. The encouraging feature of the market is the out of town demand. There were many good shipping orders early in the week. Leo Niessen had some large orders for choice Beauties, Brides and Maids, which are not nearly so plentiful since the last hot wave. Some exceptionally fine Bridesmaids have been coming in from Westerly, R. I., to S. S. Pennock who gets much choice stock from growers in that locality. These flowers were so fine they readily brought 12½ cents, or about double the market price.

Carnations are not particularly good stock now. There are some really fine flowers and some sleepy looking and sour smelling bunches that are not a credit to the grower or dealer. Many of these go to waste and some are offered with better stuff by the street men at 5 cents a dozen retail. Sweet peas are in fine form. The outdoor flowers, pot grown or frame protected, are in crop. C. E. Meehan was one of the first to have them in quantity. The price is, of course, lower but they sell well. Valley has been selling for the weddings, as also the orchids obtainable. Leo Niessen had bluets, or cornflowers, last week. Lilies, which were rather poor stock at Decoration day, went a shade better for the weddings. Callas do not seem to be wanted now.

Last, but not least, peonies. They are in their glory but unfortunately they are tremendously in excess of the demand and many are wasted and many sell at ridiculously low prices. The glut cannot last beyond this week.

Work Hard; Play Hard.

The sporting event of the week will be the great baseball game set for Saturday afternoon, June 11, when the hustlers of the Flower Market will meet their no less active brethren of Robert Craig & Sons, at Forty-ninth and Market streets. The Flower Market team will be minus the services of their famous pony battery, but they will have a fast aggregation of talent confident of victory, while the West Philadelphia team strengthened by some notable players from outlying districts, feel certain of increasing their reputations as winners. The Market will close at 4 p. m. on this eventful day. Every florist with a drop of sporting blood in his veins should see this fierce contest.

Various Notes.

C. G. Papsch has just opened a store at Atlantic City.

R. C. Hayden, of C. F. Edgar & Co., and Thomas S. Beattie, of the Strafford Flower Farm, were elected members of the Florists' Club last Tuesday evening.

Adolph Farenwald is cutting new crop Beauties.

George E. Carpenter is said to make bouvardia pay well. His method is to flower it in December, not attempting another crop but following with Easter and bedding plants. He grows all three colors of bouvardia.

The Florists' Bowling team and several others in the profession spent Thursday at Essington, with the members of the other teams in the bowlers' league and their friends.

C. F. Edgar & Co. have put electric lights in their ice box, which is a great improvement. They are receiving some nice carnations.

Edward Reid has lately sold a farm in Dakota for a satisfactory price.

It is rumored that Myers & Samtman will plant a large house with Liberty this season.

Miss Wyatt, daughter of William H. Wyatt, of 236 North Thirteenth street, was married last Monday.

Edward Swayne, of Wawaset, sent some superb white peonies to S. S. Pennock for Memorial day.

Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I., is sending some nice Kaiserins to Leo Niessen.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Another good week in cut flowers has just passed. According to the glowing accounts of our daily press of the elaborate decorations that are being done in the different state buildings at the World's Fair, also weddings and school work about the city, the past week must have been a busy one for our florists. The almost incessant rain stopped work on the outside, though most of it is finished. A lot of planting is yet to be done at the World's Fair grounds.

The President's daughter is still with us, having prolonged her stay, attending social affairs given in her honor almost every day and night, at which a great many cut flowers are being used and of course only the choice stock is wanted for these occasions. Those who were fortunate enough to furnish these orders wish that Miss Roosevelt would remain with us all summer. But others of note will visit us this summer, who will receive much attention from the social folks, and of course floral decorations will be one of the features, so the St. Louis florists expect to be busy all this summer with work of that kind.

Stock of the first quality is very scarce, but in other grades there were plenty for all demands the past week. In American Beauties fancies were limited, with good demand for all that came in. Shorts, too, cleaned up every day for design work. For the best Beauties $2.50 to $3 per dozen was asked. Others ran from $1.50 per dozen down to $5 per 100. Of the smaller roses, such as Bride, Maid, Gate, Liberty and Meteor, there seemed to be plenty in the market, of the first and second grade stock. There was a big demand for fancy stock in these, and prices ranged from $3 to $6 per 100. Some extra fancy brought $8 per 100. In the poorer grades of carnations the market is well supplied at present, only fancies being scarce, the demand for these large, and $2 to $3 per 100 asked for the best; $1 to $1.50 for the common small stock. Outdoor stock suffered a great deal last week from the heavy rains, the demand being good for this material for the many lawn decorations. Sweet peas are in great abundance, prices ranging from 25 to 60 cents per 100 in small lots. Good peas can be bought for $3.50 per 1000. A few Harrisii and callas were still to be had the past week. Plenty of greens of all kinds except long asparagus strings. Prices remain as usual for this stock.

Various Notes.

Visitors in town the past week were J. Steckler, C. R. Panter, president and secretary respectively of the Louisiana State Horticultural Society; A. Kerlec, seedsman of New Orleans, La.; Herbert Heller and wife of New Castle, Ind.; Harry Balsley, Detroit, Mich.; Hunter Hough, Paducah, Ky.; George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo.

At the dedication of the Indiana building at the World's Fair the place was handsomely decorated with 5,000 American Beauties furnished by Heller Bros., of New Castle, Ind. Herbert Heller was here in person to supervise the decorations.

The Missouri building at the World's Fair was also dedicated the past week. The flowers used in this building were furnished by George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill. The decorations consisted of roses, carnations and peonies.

Ostertag Bros. furnished the decorations at the Kearns mansion for the reception in honor of Miss Roosevelt last Thursday. They also decorated the Catlin mansion last week for a similar affair.

The Ellison Floral Co. furnished 600 American Beauties for a reception given at the Japanese building last week.

Otto Koenig, of the Koenig Floral Co., and treasurer of the Florists' Club, was kicked by his horse the past week, which will keep him indoors for several days.

At the committeemen's meeting the past week in the Exposition building a great deal was done regarding convention work. Henry Ostertag, chairman of the decorating committee, has his plans for decorating both halls. Frank M. Ellis, chairman of the hotel committee, reported quite a lot of applications for hotel accommodations. Supt. Kuehn and his assistant, Fred Meinhardt, report plenty of applications for space. Otto Koenig could not be present owing to sickness. Carl Beyer, R. F. Tesson and F. C. Weber failed to report. J. J. Beneke, who has charge of the souvenir book, reported a great deal of space taken. J. F. Ammann of the reception committee, reported progress. The committee will meet again this week Thursday in the Exposition building at 2 o'clock and every Thursday hereafter until convention time.

The first Sunday opening of the year of Missouri Botanic Garden, better known as Shaw's Garden, was June 5. The largest attendance that ever gathered at this famous place was recorded. It was estimated that no less than 26,000 persons entered the gates between the hours of 2 and 7 p. m. The greatest attractions were the cactus and orchid collections. The orchid collection alone consists of no less than 1,200 species and is under the care of E. G. McClure. Prof. Trelease, Prof. Irish and a host of students, who acted as guides, were very attentive and especially so to the ladies. The flower beds in the garden also attracted a great deal of attention from the visitors.

Will Craig, of the firm of Robert Craig & Son, Philadelphia, is spending a few days in St. Louis selling palms and taking in the sights of the World's Fair.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The usual drop in prices followed Memorial day, but for several days there was no great surplus, owing to cool, cloudy weather. The market is rather dull at present, but weddings and class graduations will tend to bring it up during the balance of the month. Beauties hold at from $4 to $12 per 100, Brides and Bridesmaids from $4 to $6. Carnations are in heavy supply at from $1 to $2, a few fancies selling higher. Single peonies have been plentiful the last few days and double varieties are now coming in freely. They sell quite well, pink and white shades going best. A good many nymphæas are now seen in the windows, while bunches of herbaceous flowers, such as oriental poppies, German iris, etc., are noticed. Some salpiglossis is seen in one or two stores.

Rhododendron Exhibition.

The annual rhododendron show was held on June 4 and 5 and, contrary to expectations, proved to be a remarkably good one. While rhododendrons have been seen more numerously, there was a fine show of these considering the damage done to the plants and flower buds the past winter. For twelve trusses of unquestioned hardiness Wm. Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, won with the following varieties: Sherwoodense, Schiller, Everestianum, roseum grandiflorum, speculatum, Caractacus, purpureum elegans, Generic, album elegans, roseum pictum, delicatissimum and Blandianum. The same exhibitor won for six trusses. T. D. Hatfield, gardener to Walter Hunnewell, won for twelve and six trusses of tender varieties. The same exhibitor was awarded a silver medal for a display of several hundred bottles of hardy and tender varieties. W. C. Winter had a nice lot of named varieties.

For hardy azaleas Wm. Thatcher and T. C. Thurlow took the prizes with fine displays. There was the finest display of German iris seen for years. For thirty-six vases T. C. Thurlow, H. C. Merriam and W. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, won. The varieties Her Majesty, from F. J. Rea, a beautiful pink, and Madonna alba, from H. C. Merriam, received honorable mention. Wm. Thatcher had the best display of single and double pyrethrums and also in the class for display of cut branches of ornamental trees and shrubs, showing 120 varieties. W. A. Riggs, gardener to E. A. Clarke, and Warren Heustis were second and third, each showing over 100 varieties. There was keen competition for thirty varieties of native plants, the prizes going to Mrs. Arthur Clarke, Mrs. A. S. Colbourn, the Misses Doran, Miss A. E. Shattuck and Miss K. Buitta.

There were numerous miscellaneous displays. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. filled the center of the lecture hall with a splendid group of palms, rhododendrons (including some fine Cunningham's white) azaleas, coniferæ, Nephrolepis Piersoni etc. T. D. Hatfield had a group of rhododendrons in pots, comprising fine plants of Lady Gray Egerton and delicatissimum, also a fine lot of Calla Elliottiana, plants two years old from seed.

Lager & Hurrell had a nice group of orchids, comprising Lælia tenebrosa, Cattleya Mendelli, Lælia purpurata, Dendrobium transparens, and other seasonable varieties. E. J. Mitton, J. Lawson, gardener, received a cultural certificate for a finely flowered pan of the rather difficult Lælia majalis and E. O. Orpet, gardener to E. V. R. Thayer, a similar award for some superb Odontoglossum crispum, the plants being all grown in pure fern fibre, leaf-mold culture having been tried and abandoned. These are the finest spikes seen in Boston for years.

Harvard Botanic Gardens had a fine group, with Clerodendron Balfouri as a center piece, numerous fuchsias including the graceful F. gracilis, Asparagus Sprengeri, etc. Mr. Cameron also staged a magnificent lot of hardy perennials, filling sixty feet of table, which was the star feature of the show. J. B. Shurtleff had a collection of twenty-three varieties of aquilegias, B. P. Ware a table of Moutan peonies, Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. J. B. Lawrence nice general displays, C. W. Parker and others Iris Germanica. There was a fine display of seasonable vegetables.

The annual peony show occurs on June 11. There will undoubtedly be a grand show, as peonies never looked so well as at present. In addition to the regular money prizes, medals are offered by Kelway & Son, of Langport, England. The rose and strawberry show occurs on June 21 and 22 and promises to be much above the average.

The Boston Park System.

Never has the extensive Boston park system looked better than at present. The copious rains have given a luxuriance and richness to the foliage better than we remember to have seen before. It is necessary to spend a whole day on the thirty miles of driveways and seventy miles of pathways contained in the 2,500 acres comprising the Metropolitan park system. Superintendent Pettigrew has just completed an extensive block of stables, store rooms, carpenters', blacksmiths' and other shops, engine houses, etc., and is grading and planting around the same.

The growth being made by the oaks, lindens, ginkgos, elms and other trees planted by the thousands by Mr. Pettigrew during the last seven years is remarkable and his development of the park system commands the admiration of everyone who can appreciate the immense work he has done here and also can see at a glance that all his planning is not merely for present effect but for the benefit of future generations. Interesting as the system now is, it will become increasingly so, for having now got the system into shape Mr. Pettigrew will each year introduce groups or colonies of newer and more choice subjects in suitable locations. Fine blocks of trees, shrubs, and perennial plants are contained in the nurseries and Boston will undoubtedly continue to lead the country with her park system.

Various Notes.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society made the first visit of the season, on June 7, to the beautiful estate of Walter Hunnewell, of Wellesley. They found the fifty acres of grounds in first-class order. While the hardy rhododendrons and azaleas were prime attractions, the herbaceous plants, lawns, Italian garden and numerous handsome trees and shrubs were admired. The extensive display of Azalea Indica, tender rhododendrons, pelargoniums, hydrangeas, Calla Elliottiana, and other indoor plants were also a great attraction. In the orchid houses were found a fine display of cattleyas, odontoglossums and miltonias, the latter probably the finest in the country. Fern fibre is preferred to leaf-mold as a compost for all orchids.

Kenneth Finlayson has been quite seriously sick with inflammatory rheumatism for the past month and his many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

The regular meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club occurs at Horticultural Hall on June 14. There will be no meetings during July and August.

Geraniums to the number of 35,000 have recently been planted in the public gardens. The following varieties are used: Double and single General Grant, La Favorite, S. A. Nutt, Gloire de France, rose color; Mme. Thibaut, Duc de Mortimer, Beaute Poitevine and King Olga. The rhododendron and azalea beds are attractive. A display of 20,000 foxgloves in Copley Square will make a good showing in a few days.

There have been some fine wedding decorations during the past week. At the Thayer-Russell wedding in South Lancaster, Doyle used hydrangeas, lilies, Beauty roses and palms chiefly. A large bank of splendid Odontoglossum crispum grown by Mr. Thayer's gardener, E. O. Orpet, was a feature in the church. Miltonias were used as center pieces on the breakfast tables. Peonies and field daisies are being largely used this week. Hardy roses will succeed them in a few days.

W. N. CRAIG.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

It is rather late to report on Decoration day. My idea of it is that, if anything but a soaking rain all day had been sent us, we should all of us have been very busy. The business lost in cut flowers on that day is gone, never to be recovered. If a person wants to order a box of flowers for his best girl, or order his vase filled or flower garden fixed up he will do it by telephone or wait for a fine day, but the thousands who would visit our cemeteries and take along a bunch of flowers, cannot venture out, save their money and we are "minus." Still, these are only the ups and downs of business, and what did the baseball magnates lose and the other caterers to public recreation? It is all forgotten, and business has since been good. There has been no event calling for special floral decorations of late, yet a good, steady demand. The cool, wet days about Decoration day cooled the ardor of those wanting their flower beds filled. We are always late in the bedding business in this city and the last few days, and the week to come, has meant long and busy hours for all the plantmen. While flower gardening in its proper sense, and the usual planting and ornamental plants, will be in volume about as usual, the use of the veranda box seems somewhat on the decline.

Various Notes.

The quantity of bedding plants that Park Superintendent Braik and his assistant, John Cameron, turn out of their limited amount of glass is truly remarkable and quality cannot be beaten. A big force will soon complete the job of planting.

A very short visit to South Park found Prof. Cowell at home and he was also busy with the flower gardening department. That is, of course, only a small feature in the Botanic Garden, but the masses like masses of gay colors and they get it in long lines of as fine a lot of zonale geraniums as the writer ever saw planted out, and they were mostly of those two matchless varieties, Nutt and Perkins. The public ought and does appreciate the mammoth conservatory and its varied contents. Botanically it is a great collection and appeals to all classes, to him who wants to study palms, orchids or ferns or she who is more interested in a bunch of bananas or coffee on the bush.

We had a visit from Peter Crowe, of Utica, last week and we paid a visit to Croweanum Kasting. Mr. Kasting has been late at his office for the past few mornings. Don't blame him; a twelve pound girl recently arrived, which is an attraction that will keep any young father lingering at home. All parties are doing well and the young lady will be christened Jasminum Elegantissima Filicifolia Robusta. All this will be abbreviated in after years to "Sweet Jas."

An insurance agent met us at the door of the commission house and after a "good day" said: "The boys inside showed me a red spider that eats the American Beauties; dreadful thing is it not?" We replied, "Oh, yes," thinking that he had been showed the injured foliage of the roses. But what was our surprise on looking at a large vase of western Beauties to be told by one of the smart young salesmen that they had just caught a red spider. Mr. Crowe asked how big it was and the young man indicated its length by marking off two inches of his little finger, Mr. Crowe pronounced it the leaf roller and I gave it the temporary name of Rosasis Brukerii. Nothing like being posted on the enemies of roses. The best cure for this variety of red spider is hand picking or a machine gun.

Charlie Gunther is still sending in fine Bridesmaids and very fine Kaiserins.

W. J. Palmer & Son are making a lead of President Carnot roses. As a winter bloomer this beautiful rose was a failure and it took several years for the public to fancy it, but now it goes well in summer time.

Buffalo has a high-toned race track now and society is to patronize it, so it is to be a little Saratoga. This is not horticultural news and is inserted merely to acquaint brother florists who have sporting blood, that June 6 they can begin to study the dope. W. S.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The month of roses was ushered in by wedding bells. Society contributed seven brilliant weddings to the opening day, church weddings most of them, with fine floral decorations, the peony especially being in evidence. Orange blossoms, white orchids and lily of the valley were used profusely. Many of the prominent retailers had a share in the festivities. The month of June will doubtless, with its weddings and ocean voyages, do much to even up on one of the most disastrous Mays on record. The past week has been a stunner; shipments immense, quality deteriorating, demand microscopical, and now the present week opens with about 100 degrees of heat and mildew rampant and prices tending downward, except with lily of the valley and the higher grades of Beauties. Lilies are still very abundant and carnations can be had at your own price.

Peony Doings.

This is peony week in New York, not only in the cut flower section but up at Bronx Park, where on Wednesday and Thursday the summer meeting and exhibition takes place under the auspices of the Horticultural Society of New York. Added to their display of roses, strawberries and peonies will be the exhibition of the American Peony Society. At 3 p. m. Wednesday a public meeting will be in charge of the Peony Society, when papers on this popular flower will be discussed. Afterwards the museum, herbarium, library, greenhouses and laboratories will be open for inspection. Valuable prizes will be awarded for exhibits, among them a gold medal for the collection of the largest number of varieties of herbaceous peonies. Many of the leading growers of this flower are expected to be at the meeting, from Nebraska, Chicago, Cleveland, Massachusetts and Rochester, as well as the nearer cities of Philadelphia and Boston.

Next Monday evening at the rooms of the New York Florists' Club another peony exhibit will be made, this being the last regular club meeting for the summer. There will also be an exhibit of strawberries with cream and the ladies are specially invited. John Birnie has a "surprise" for the occasion and some fine vaudeville talent will add to the evening's enjoyment. Several peony experts are expected to address the assembly and preparations are being made to accommodate an attendance of 300.

The Plant Market.

A call at the plant market last Saturday morning at 2 o'clock was an interesting experience. Even at that early hour a large number of growers were on hand and several buyers were already selecting stock for the day's requirements. Later the numbers rapidly increased and before 3 a. m. the business was in full swing and a majority of the stock engaged. The veteran Johnny Weir, who never sleeps, was one of the earliest and most wakeful buyers. Mallon, of Brooklyn, and Wadley & Smythe, of New York, had representatives on hand early picking up some choice goods. Prices are very reasonable and the quality was superb. The new market is still the topic of interest. That very morning the comptroller had sent a message asking the attendance of a committee to confer with him. Up to date this year 132 different growers have brought their plants to the market and the average attendance eighty-five. Outside of the tents a good many utilize the spaces, paying a nominal rental of $1 daily, or $15 for the season. Fritz Dressel and A. Schultheis have their stands on the outside.

L. H. Eisenburg ships a good deal to adjacent towns and cities, making heavy purchases daily. Steinhoff still has a fine display of Crimson Ramblers now selling at popular prices. He has disposed of 20,000 this year ranging in prices from $25 to $1. Lehnig & Winnefeld had a fine display of petunias. R. Dreyer brought lilac, privet and hydrangeas in pots, Charles Hunt made a fine exhibit of pansies, sometimes disposing of 200 boxes in a morning. Leach had an abundance of yellow daisies and petunias. Darsley, Harrison, Hunt and Daly Bros. all had geraniums. John Birnie, the "foundation stone of the structure" these many years, maintains his record as the verbena and fuchsia king of the market.

These are strenuous hours, 2 a. m. to 7. It seems as though the necessity for such an unnatural start might be avoided. Day after day for months this turning night into day is maintained. How the regulars preserve their health and stay in a business that makes such a system a necessity it is hard to understand. The new building will inaugurate a different system, more modern and less unreasonable let us hope, and that it's early completion may be announced is the universal desire of the trade.

Various Notes.

Traendly & Schenck have removed to their new building, 44 West Twenty-eighth street, where they will have 5,400 square feet of floor space, double counters, electric lights in store and basement and all the modern conveniences. Ten years ago the firm commenced business at this very address and now they have a long lease of the entire four-story building and will doubtless make this their permanent abode. Their business shows a steady increase.

Young & Nugent handled last week some of the finest Cattleya gigas the New York market has seen, readily demanding 60 cents. Their daily shipmets of Liberties show no diminution in quantity.

John Scott, of Brooklyn, is now shipping his new fern, Scottii. The advance orders have been enormous. The stock in 6 to 14-inch pots for the retail trade is now being grown for early fall distribution. The future of the fern seems assured.

R. M. Ward, the importer, left for a European trip on May 31, via the steamer Crown Prince.

H. H. Berger & Co. report an immense sale of fancy leaved caladiums from Brazil.

The auction sales are still well attended. Bedding stock brings excellent prices. A few more weeks will see the close of a very prosperous season.

George M. Stumpp, of the Stumpp & Walter Company, has returned from a week's visit at the St. Louis exposition. Mr. Walter is there now. The exhibit of the firm will interest conventionists. A special exhibit will also be sent in August. Mr. Stumpp speaks highly of the exposition and enjoyed its many interesting features exceedingly. He suggests the securing of room accommodations by the S. A. F. visitors from New York well in advance of their arrival.

Charles Zarembo, of West Hoboken, a florist 60 years of age, had the misfortune to lose his barn and greenhouses by fire Friday, May 13, and a subscription has been raised by his friends in the trade toward making another venture possible. P. Owerkert, of Jersey City, has consented to act as custodian of the subscriptions made in Mr. Zarembo's behalf.

Bowling.

It is impossible yet to state the exact make-up of the team that will bowl at St. Louis, but a fair guess would make it Lang, Traendly, O'Mara, Siebrecht, Ford and Guttman.

The Bowling Club is well pleased with the new alleys and the attendance, considering the heat, is encouraging. The prizes donated for high scoring by Capt. Lang were won by himself and William Siebrecht. The intense temperature for the present week is likely to reduce enthusiasm. Scores last Tuesday were as follows:

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Conditions changed for the worse during the later days of last week and the market now has so much poor stock it is impossible to sell it all and so little good stock that wholesalers hold on to it for country customers and cannot get enough. There is a fair out of town demand, because of the large number of spring weddings and the annual school closings and local trade is reasonably active by virtue of the same causes. There are great quantities of roses coming in, but very few of them are of a quality which will permit their use in the better class of work. The good roses, if they may be called such, bring a very fair price but the larger end of the receipts is sold to the Greeks by the wagon load. Some of the carnations are good for so late in the season, but lack keeping quality, as has been the case for some little time, and many complaints come from the buyers. Another part of the carnation receipts is worth little or nothing upon arrival and generally goes to the dump, so the average is very low indeed.

Peonies did better last week than had been expected. The southern crop came to an abrupt end and left a few days interval before the local cut was ready. Up to Monday prices were fairly firm; the exception to this was the poorer grades, the single varieties and the Old Red which came in large quantities. None of these were salable. The local cut has been heavy this week and prices vary widely.

Longiflorum lilies are still one of the problems on the hands of the wholesalers and valley is another. Spring weddings are taking a great deal of indoor valley at a fair figure but there are very large receipts of the outdoor stock which are moved with difficulty. The outdoor tulips are at an end. Sweet peas of good quality command a fair price, but the indifferent and low grades, which predominate, are not wanted. There are large supplies of feverfew, daisies, pansies and candytuft. Still a few jasmines, lilacs, etc., none of which are in active demand. New ferns are coming in. Asparagus strings have shortened up, but smilax is fairly plentiful, the reverse of the condition which has maintained for several months.

Various Notes.

It is announced that the Albert Fuchs auction sale, beginning next Wednesday, will continue from 2 to 7 p. m. to give everybody a chance.

Peter Weiland writes that he struck good business at Cincinnati at the time of opening his new wholesale store, it being the week of school closing, but since then business has been quiet. He is putting his peonies in cold storage.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold McCormick last Thursday gave the most elaborate garden party Chicago society has ever known. They employed an architect to plan the decorations of the grounds and gave the Geo. Wittbold Co. the order for the floral work. Hardy outdoor stock was used in enormous quantities, it being reported that the Wittbold Co. received $2,000 for the job.

Joe Curran keeps a very nice window at his Michigan avenue store, formerly the Johnson & Swan stand. Recently he had a lot of very fine Prosperity carnations in one of Hunt's birch bark vases.

J. B. Deamud is getting in heavy supplies of peonies from Jas. Hartshorne, of Joliet. The singles are very beautiful flowers but are not wanted in quantity by the retailers. Some of the double varieties are excellent. The Festiva maxima has been selling at $1 per dozen this week. Geo. Piepgras is now with Mr. Deamud.

Geo. Reinberg is getting a very large cut of Liberty roses of good quality. He is so well satisfied with this variety that it is being planted largely for next year.

An occasional azalea is still seen in the market.

The F. Blondeel Co., at Oak Park, is getting a big cut of carnations of very fair grade.

John Mangel was granted a divorce from his wife on June 2.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is getting in nice candidum lilies and reports fair sale. They had an order for 10,000 daisies for Tuesday and got most of the stock in the house before a telegram came to cancel, the customer had lost his order.

J. A. Budlong says young rose stock has been selling much slower than usual this year; he is offering Beauties at the price asked for teas a year or two ago.

Benthey & Co. are getting a fine cut of long Beauties from stock cut back in March.

Albert Amling certainly isn't losing money on "green goods," not if a new automobile is a sign of prosperity.

Peter Didier, brother-in-law of N. J. Wietor and well known to many in the trade, died on Monday.

The boys from the Growers' Market played a game of baseball on Sunday with a team of the employes of the wholesalers in the Atlas block and defeated them 24 to 18. The teams were as follows. Market. Jno. Evert, ss; Nick Evert, p; P. Sinner, cf; Jno. Paulus, 2b; Frank Pisternick, lf; M. Kinney, c; Baldwin, 3b; A. Marie, rf; Arthur Blewitt, 1b. Atlas, Dick Rolston, c; Frank Potocka, 3b; C. OCEANIC, N. J.—The Monmouth County Horticultural Society, which met here June 3, voted to hold its seventh annual chrysanthemum show at Red Bank November 1 and 2.

ASBURY PARK, N. J.—R. K. Abbott, who has been with the Ralston establishment here for four years, and for many years in the trade, has opened a flower store on Main street, at the head of Wesley lake. At the annual beach opening he presented the city with a six-foot horseshoe of galax leaves and Lawson carnations.

OTTAWA, ONT.—H. Wright is building two very large houses, 25x400, connected.

TEXARKANA, TEX.—The Rose Hill Floral Co. is a new concern in the business here.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Arthur E. Rendle, the greenhouse architect and builder, has instituted suit against Howard Gould to recover $33,000 for work on the expensive greenhouses at Castle Gould near Sands Point.

OVERVEEN, HOLLAND.—Van Namen Bros., of Zwijndrecht, were awarded a certificate of merit at the May 18 meeting of the Dutch Horticultural Society for winter-flowering stock, Empress Elizabeth. The color is carmine rose and the committee recommended it as a very fine cut flower.

FISHKILL, N. Y.—Benj. Hammond, who is S. A. F. vice president for New York (east), has issued a neat pamphlet which he is sending to members of the trade "to invite you and your wife to join the society." The booklet contains portraits of the S. A. F. officers and John N. May's paper on greenhouse construction read at the Milwaukee convention.

PACIFIC COAST.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The florists are endeavoring to get the city council to take action prohibiting the street venders of flowers from plying their trade, representing that they are an injury to an industry representing an investment of over a million dollars. The Herald arises to the defense of the peddlers.

CARNATION NOTES.

The growers in the vicinity of San Francisco are kept very busy this warm June weather. I made a tour of some of the principal places last week and find everyone in the midst of planting stock in the field. The stock generally looks thrifty. Several of our large growers handle their stock entirely in pots until they are finally planted in the benches. First they are rooted in sand, then transplanted into flats, then shifted into thumb pots; then into 4-inch and finally into 6-inch pots, where they are allowed to grow a couple of months before they are brought into the houses. This method entails considerable more handling and quite an outlay for pots but there is no check to the plants in the final planting and no danger from gophers, a pest with which the California carnation growers have considerable trouble.

Of the varieties that will be planted extensively I find several additions to our regular standard kinds. Flora Hill easily leads in white. This variety seems to fill the bill for California for an all-around white. Prosperity is pronounced by all growers to be a rather shy bearer and although the flowers bring a good figure it does not pay as well as the other variety mentioned. In the neighborhood of Burlingame, however, it is being planted quite freely. I saw several patches of Gov. Wolcott and heard quite a difference of opinion regarding its merits as a paying variety and I think it will be another season before we can tell very much about it. It is a grand flower and brings top prices. White Cloud and Queen Louise I found were favored by some growers and will be grown quite extensively for the coming season.

In scarlet varieties Estelle is away ahead of everything else; fully seventy-five per cent of the bench room reserved for red is given to this kind. Portia is grown only in the smaller places and for the cheaper trade. America seems to have been discarded on account of its dull color, Crane because it is rather shy with us and blooms in crops. I found several growers trying Adonis but they do not seem to be able to tell whether it will be profitable or not. A South San Francisco grower has a very nice lot of Flamingo, which he thinks is going to be one of our coming red sorts. Red Bradt does not seem to be much in favor here; the growers claim that it is a shy bearer.

Mrs. Lawson still holds the first place as an all-around pink variety, although it is subject to thrips more than any other kind and for this reason in some localities it is hard to handle in the summer. This thrips is a queer proposition. In some places, where we have plenty of cool ocean breezes and foggy nights, it is almost unknown and at a distance of a mile or two inland it comes very near putting the grower out of business in the summer time.

E. Schwerin is a local variety and a good one, being a deep rich pink somewhat the color of Lawson. It is grown quite extensively here and is a good paying variety. Crocker is gradually being discarded, as it is only a summer blooming variety. Joost and Scott are planted by the smaller growers and Japanese gardeners. They are both heavy bloomers but bring very low prices. Cressbrook is being discarded also by a majority of the planters. Some claim the color is not stable enough and others say it is a very shy bearer, so it will have to go. Enchantress seems to have only a few friends for about the same reasons. Higinbotham is grown in a few places. It seems to be well spoken of and one grower has stock enough to plant an entire house. It is a very good light pink but not generally known about. Mrs. Nelson comes in for a diversity of opinion also but the general verdict seems to be that it is rather a shy bearer. Triumph is a good variety and will be planted very largely this season. It is of easy growth and makes splendid long stems and big blooms. In yellow and variegated shades many growers do not compete at all. Mrs. Bradt is the best of its class but it had a tendency, the last season, to come very weak stemmed and is not in great favor on that account. John Carbone is one of the best paying sorts and Stella is planted considerably. In yellow Eldorado seems to be the best liked although Gold Nugget will be planted considerably. Mayor Pingree has been thrown out completely I believe. In dark red sorts John Hinkle still is in the lead and a good many Roosevelt are seen.

Some of our growers have experimented with seedling carnations and I have seen several very fine flowers that were raised in this way. A good many novelties are being sent here from the east but it will be another season before we can tell whether they will prove profitable.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have safely passed over Decoration day and from what I am able to learn it was up to the average in business. Saturday seemed to be the busiest day although Sunday was a close second. The retailers sold out well and the growers cut everything very close, so there has been but little brought into town this week. A Sutter street florist told me today that he had not been able to get enough flowers since Decoration day to fill up his windows properly. Of course on a day of this kind there is only a limited demand for fine stock. Most of the stuff sold is hardy outside flowers with the exception of carnations and these, especially the white and pink varieties were in good demand. Sweet peas were the next on the list and the growers, especially the Chinese, ran the price up from 50 cents per dozen bunches to $1 and this is the price the stores had to pay from Tuesday through the week. The bunches were made only about half the usual size and the growers made a handsome profit for a few days. White stocks and Bride gladioli were handled by the thousands. Gaillardias, candytuft, coreopsis, and Shirley poppies had a good run and callas could not be had in sufficient quantity to fill orders. Bachelor's buttons and marguerites cost the stores about 75 cents per dozen bunches and everyone was sold out on Sunday morning, so I think that all told we had as good a Memorial day's trade as I have ever seen in San Francisco.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Proper observance of Memorial day was shown here and never before were there so many flowers used. As one of our cemetery superintendents stated, there were wagon loads of beautiful roses, the graves being literally covered. But the florists did not reap the usual harvest because of so much outdoor stock. Everybody had a garden full of flowers and local trade suffered in consequence. It was the out of town orders which kept us busy, the demand being the greatest in years. Distance is not considered by some people and Oregon roses were shipped as far as Montana, Nebraska and Iowa. There were many varieties of common though beautiful flowers to be had in abundance, but they did not prove a profitable investment to the florist. The first sweet peas on twelve-inch stems were ushered in the week preceding Decoration day and became so plentiful as to sell on the streets for 10 cents a big bunch. A few hundred fine white peonies retailed at $1.50 per dozen. The city was almost bombarded with bachelor's buttons, which grow as abundantly here as sunflowers in Kansas. Thousands of them were handled by the street venders, who were out in full force. H. J. M.

CLEVELAND.

August Schmitt has been in poor health for some time and on the evening of June 1 shot himself through the head while in bed. The flash from the revolver is supposed to have set the bed clothing on fire and when the family, who were absent, returned home in the evening they found the building in flames. The fire was extinguished but not before Mr. Schmitt's body was badly burned. He was 63 years of age.

The Cleveland Floral Co. has been licensed to incorporate with a capital of $30,000. The incorporators named are C. W. Fuller, J. L. Bradley, L. R. Canfield, J. A. Cline and E. L Hatfield. The company is to take over the business of the Grant-Wilson Floral Co.

GIBSON CITY, ILL.—Swan Peterson has sold a large quantity of bedding stock to the Wabash Railroad for use on the station grounds.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Richard Shannon, whose florist's establishment is at Greene and Franklin avenues, is figuring in the newspaper accounts arising from the trouble at the Merchants Bank occasioned by the failure of Woodend & Co., brokers. It seems that Mr. Shannon is not only a florist but a capitalist and a director in the bank. He had recently a considerable amount of collateral in the bank and instructed its president to sell 100 shares of Sugar stock for his account. This the president did through Woodend & Co., realizing $12,800 which the brokers failed to pay over to the bank, claiming that its president was indebted to them. Then the brokers failed and the florist inquired of the bank as to where he was to get his money. It resulted in the resignation of the bank president and, although the florist is a director in the bank, he will probably have to sue to get his money.

HARTFORD, CONN.—George S. Osborn, who is still in ill health, is closing out his business. The real estate has been sold, also the greenhouses, which are being removed.

NORTH MANCHESTER, IND.—Harry White has bought the glass and business of the North Manchester greenhouses and will shortly move his glass from his former location near Wabash.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

M. C. Reynolds, of Phoneton, O., secretary of the Albaugh Nursery Co., is dead, aged 62 years.

W. A. Peterson, Chicago, is at New York and attended the meeting of the American Peony Society this week.

Len Small, of A. L. Small & Son, nurserymen, of Kankakee, Ill., has been nominated as the republican candidate for state treasurer.

The cherry is one item for which nurserymen may with confidence count on good prices for some seasons. Stocks are light and demand heavy.

The bay tree is steadily rising in popular favor and those nurserymen whose importations were larger than ever this spring found a ready market.

This is the season at which the peony occupies the attention of many nurserymen. There has been big business in this line in the last few years.

The American Park and Outdoor Art Association is holding its annual convention at St. Louis this week. Few nurserymen have attended since the first year or two.

The large loss of stock on private estates during the past winter has brought a considerable demand for specimen plants of many species to fill gaps in plantations. Very good prices are being paid for stock for immediate effect.

Edwin H. Riehl, the nurseryman near Alton, Ill., is introducing a new strawberry known as No. 28, which is a cross of Brandywine and Ruby. It is an extra large, early variety, of good shape, fine color, firm and sound and of large producing quality.

BUILDING AND PIPING.

I want to build two greenhouses 18x 50 feet, with side walls five and one-half feet high and ten feet to ridge. The houses will run east and west, the south house to be used for carnations, the other for mixed stock. There will be three benches in each house. I have a No. 15 Hitchings boiler. Will it be large enough to heat the two houses when it is about zero outside? The carnations will require 50 and the mixed stock 65 degrees. Would it be advisable to put in an emergency boiler? I have 4-inch boiler flues for the north house, also a lot of 1-inch pipe for the carnation house. How many flows and returns will I need? Or how many 3-inch boiler flues will it take? I can buy these cheap. How should I run the pipes? Should I build even or three-quarter span? The ground is level and the houses will, of course, have a partition wall. C. J. L.

If the ridge is to run east and west by all means build three-quarter span houses with the long side to the south. Under most circumstances it is best to run the ridge north and south and use the even-span type of structure. To maintain the desired temperature in the "mixed house" with 3-inch boiler tubes it will require nine runs of pipe. A 3-inch riser might be carried under the ridge and eight more runs placed under the benches if the pressure system is to be used. If open circuit is used all of the nine runs can be arranged under the benches. If 1-inch pipe is used in the carnation house a 2½-inch flow under the ridge feeding twenty-four 1-inch returns placed under the benches will be required. It is not advisable to attempt to heat a greenhouse with 1-inch radiation pipes and a hot water plant; the pipes should not be less than 1¼-inch and if 1½ or 2-inch so much the better. If 3-inch tubes are used in place of the 1-inch pipe, arrange the pipes the same as specified for the other house. It is likely that the No. 15 boiler will be large enough but if you wish to make provision for extreme conditions run two lines of 1-inch pipes under each side bench and three under each center bench, a 1½-inch riser under the ridge and connect all up to a four horse-power steam boiler which can be fired in extreme weather. If you have the pipe and can pick up a fairly good second-hand boiler that will safely carry ten to fifteen pounds pressure this will be found to be a very economical plan. The hot water will serve during mild weather and the steam will provide against any possible loss during severe weather if the two are run in conjunction. L. C. C.

PIPING.

Will you kindly tell us how many lines of 3-inch pipe it will take to heat four houses 20x100? Temperature is 58 degrees at night. Also how many lines of 3-inch pipe it will take to heat two houses 10x100? In one house the temperature is 58 degrees at night and the other house for propagating, temperature 55 top and the bottom 65 degrees. Will a 6-inch main be large enough? The height on the large houses to the ridge is twelve feet and the small houses eight feet. A. N. C.

The houses 20x100 feet should each be provided with seven runs of 3-inch pipe and the small houses, 10 x 100 feet, with five lines of pipe. I assume from figures given that hot water heat is to be used and that a water temperature of at least 180 degrees will be maintained. Under these condtions a 6-inch riser, or main, will provide for the houses. L. C. C.

Johnstown, Pa.—The partnership of Schrader & Schmidt has been dissolved and William Schrader will start a new business on his own account.

Aberdeen, S. D.—On Decoration day one and one-half inches of rain fell in a very brief time and C. A. Spink's greenhouse was struck by lightning, about 200 feet of glass being destroyed.

BALDWIN, N. Y.—Geo. T. Schuneman has a large field of peonies, from which he usually cuts for Memorial day, but this season they were ten days to two weeks late. Many of the plants suffered severely during the winter, which Mr. Schuneman attributes to the severe cold with no snow blanket over the plants.

Vegetable Forcing.

CUCUMBERS are worth at Chicago from $1.50 to $4 per hundred, leaf lettuce from 15 to 25 cents a case.

LETTUCE growers who have tried it speak enthusiastically of To-bak-ine liquid as a means of keeping the houses free from insects.

SEND IN YOUR QUERIES.

During the hot summer months the vegetable forcer finds himself with empty houses and little to do but plan for next season. If there are any details of the work with which he is not thoroughly acquainted, he should write out a statement of the points about which he is in doubt and send it to the REVIEW. It will be answered by one of the most expert vegetable forcers in the country. This opportunity to get a personal opinion on an individual case is open to every subscriber of the REVIEW. SOILS FOR CUCUMBERS.

Cucumbers, unlike lettuce, are not susceptible to minute variations in soil texture. A great variety of soils can be utilized successfully for cucumbers if plenty of organic matter is supplied. Those who make a specialty of growing cucumbers under glass generally use a soil made up of three-fourths decomposed sod and one-fourth horse manure. This makes a light soil, containing a large amount of organic matter, which is replenished each year by adding more horse manure.

The fertilizers usually employed are ground bone, wood ashes, and frequently some complete commercial fertilizer. As far as our observations go, cucumbers do not respond so readily to fertilizers as many other plants, i. e., the application of a fertilizer does not manifest itself so conspicuously as in other plants. They do respond, however, quite freely to the influence of sterilized soil. In supplying organic matter to the soil we have frequently practiced sowing some leguminous crop such as white lupine or Canada peas in the beds during August and September when the houses were empty, and turning this crop under before replanting. Both of these plants are rapid growers, and the lupine readily forms large nodules, which, when turned under, supply the soil with nitrogen as well as organic matter.—GEO. E. STONE in Bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

SHIPPENSBURG, PA.—The Byer Floral Co. has started building greenhouses and auxiliary structures preparatory to entering the wholesale florist and seed business. They already have quite a stock of vegetable plants.

ELIZABETH, N. J.—In the suit of the Elizabeth Nursery Co. against the Lister Agricultural Chemical Works, of Newark, the jury returned a verdict awarding the plaintiff damages in the sum of $5,782.85. The contention was that the use of impure bone meal in the rose houses caused a loss for which the seller of the fertilizer was responsible.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THERE has been no "corn weather" so far.

S. F. LEONARD, Chicago, was a recent visitor at Louisville, Ky.

THOMAS A. COX, of the Cox Seed Co., San Francisco, is on a six weeks' eastern trip.

THE anticipated reports of poor prospects for cabbage seed crops are coming to hand.

ARNOLD RINGIER, of W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, has returned from a trip to New York.

REPORTS from the pea growing districts are to the effect that so far everything is satisfactory.

THE sweet corn contest is over. It is said, however, that there still remain a few lots to be picked up at several points in Nebraska.

SUFFICIENT acreage for a normal year's crop of cucumbers has been secured, but this is no assurance that the delivery will be more than twenty-five per cent.

SCARCELY a week goes by without an importer of canary seed protesting that it is free of duty as grass seed. Nordlinger vs. United States (T. D. 24976) decided this contention in the negative.

JAMES G. FICKLIN, of King City, Mo., is known locally as the "blue grass king" as he harvests 15,000 to 20,000 bushels of blue grass in Gentry, Andrew, De Kalb, Nodaway and Worth counties.

FOR twenty years there has not been a season which has shown so much unprepared garden land in the vicinity of Chicago at this date as the present one. This only shows how backward the spring has been.

REPORTS from the different onion set points show the growth far enough along to give something of an idea what the crop may be. At Chicago many fields on the low grounds, where lumps threw the seed drill out, are ragged and uneven. The damp, cool weather of the past week has pushed the weeds along faster than the onions, causing extra expense to keep the ground clean. The crop is two weeks behind last year, with the acreage less, and a prospect for two-thirds of last year's harvest. At Indianapolis and vicinity the acreage is a trifle more than last year, condition of crop not up to last year for evenness of growth and the prospect is for less than last year's harvest. At Louisville, Ky., the stand is not up to the average, some acres plowed up, and original planting less than last year, with the prospect for a crop not as good as a year ago at this time.

THE SEED TRADE.

G. B. McVay, president of the Amzi Godden Co., Birmingham, Ala., writes as follows under date of June 6:

The season of 1903-4, which has just now passed with us, has been a very curious one in several particulars. The demand for goods in our line early in the season bid fair to exceed any previous year's sales, but the unusually cold, dry spring very much retarded our business and the final conclusion has been most unprofitable and unsatisfactory.

The acreage in most all vegetable crops has been largely curtailed, partly owing to high prospective prices for cotton and the unfavorable season for vegetable crops. This is notably apparent in vine seed crops such as melons, canteloupes, squashes and cucumbers. The season has been most unfavorable for the germination of this particular class of seeds, which has something to do with the limited acreage planted.

CEMENT BENCHES.

Referring to Mr. Scott's description of a tile bench, in last week's REVIEW, the Niagara Cement and Concrete Company writes:

We were much interested in the manner of constructing this bench, but we are quite certain that if we could build a bench for comparison, no more like this one would be used. We don't believe in tee-irons along a bench to rust out. If such work, exposed in that way, were put into a business block, the building inspectors would kick it out in a minute. Anyway, the lime in the soil will rust through iron in no time. In our bench the adjustable braces to hold the pipes and stiffen the bench are iron but the balance is all cement and we know that no iron should be in a bench where the soil can in any way reach it or work on it to rust it out; it should be free so that at any time it can be painted. These cement benches can be put up in far less time than a wooden bench and that means something nowadays, when a house has to be kept pretty busy to meet competition, but once up they will last longer than the house and can be emptied and refilled without loss of time for repairs and with less labor than is required on any other kind of bench.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held May 31, President Ballantyne in the chair. David Macfarlane, gardener for Mrs. H. Walter Webb, Scarborough, was awarded Franz S. Pammer's prize, a scarf pin, for the best display of flowers cut from hardy shrubs. Other exhibitors were Wm. Scott and Robt. Boreham. Jas. Scott and Thos. Lee were the judges. Nominees for membership were Alex MacKensie, Geo. Instone, John Featherstone and F. Luckenbacher all from Greystone, Yonkers. One member was elected. A prize of $15 was received from Vaughan's Seed Store, New York, to be competed for at the fall exhibition. Owing to the late season the date of the June show was changed from June 9 to June 14, to be held in the Young Men's Lyceum, Tarrytown, and open from 3 p. m. till 10 p. m. Admission free. Resolutions of sympathy were tendered Francis Gibson and his family on the death of Harry Gibson.

This being ladies' night, a very pleasant evening's entertainment was in store for the members and friends, of whom there were over seventy-five present. President Ballantyne called upon our crack orator, David Macfarlane, to announce the program, which included music and elocution, by members and others. The program was followed by dancing. This was the first ladies' night this society has given and it was a success, much beyond the expectations of the committee in charge, who hope to do as well at the next ladies' night, which will be in August. ELIZABETH, N. J.—Henry Lehy is making plans to considerably enlarge his establishment this summer. He has had a lifelong experience in the business, having started with Benj. Haines in 1872. After acquiring a general knowledge of greenhouse work he went to J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York, for several years. Then he opened for himself near his present location, where he has built up a nice business. He is also manager and principal stockholder in the Lehigh Slate Roofing Co.

The Market.

Trade the past week has been all that could be desired and stock of all kinds found a ready market at good prices. This was due mainly to a number of commencements and also several weddings that used large quantities of flowers. American Beauties were in especial heavy demand and the price obtained for them was very good. Peonies were scarce, as those in this part of the country were not far enough advanced to cut. There was a scarcity of sweet peas also.

At present there is but very little life in trade. There does not seem to be anything doing socially. Some very good stock is to be had and the price has tumbled a good ways since last week. The weather has been warm and it rushed in large quantities of carnations, which show the effect of the sun. Roses, especially Brides and Maids, look very sick for the most part and those that are not mildewed have such small buds that it is hard to sell them at any price. Golden Gate and Ivory are doing very well, though it is getting to be hard to sell them while there is a Bride or Maid to be had. Beauties are holding out very well and some from the north are very fine for this time of year.

Peonies are now coming in by the wagon load and it is awfully hard to move them at anything like a paying price. The crop will soon be over and it will be a relief.

The green goods market is now well supplied with everything but there is a good demand for all kinds.

Various Notes.

H. D. Edwards was the lucky guesser in Wm. Murphy's guessing contest. His guess was 133,879 while the correct number of carnations sold by Mr. Murphy during the months of May and June was 133,884. The prize was a ticket to St. Louis.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday, June 11, at 8 p. m. Nominations for officers will be in order and our annual picnic will also be discussed. C. J. Ohmer.

Ottawa, Ont.—C. Scrim will make a number of improvements on his place this season, replacing old houses with new, and will also erect some new houses on a farm which he owns just outside the city, where he will eventually have a large plant.

ANNOUNCEMENT.....

FRED BURKI

Will be Disseminated in 1905—Commencing in January.

Fred Burki is the result of a cross between Lawson and a seedling of much merit; the latter being the seed parent. It possesses all the good qualities to induce the most conservative growers to include it among best whites.

HERE ARE A FEW OF ITS MERITORIOUS POINTS:

1st. The blooms come perfect and uniform, averaging 3 to 3½ inches in size.

2d. The stem measures from 20 to 30 inches, being stiff and erect and resembles that of Lawson.

3d. It never crops, but yields continuously from November until July.

4th. The calyx is perfect; showing no tendency of bursting.

5th. Its keeping qualities, a point not to be overlooked, are second to none and equal to the best.

6th. It transplants easily and roots like the proverbial weed.

Those who saw it growing are unanimous in declaring the FRED BURKI the ideal white in every respect. It has scored 88 points at the Detroit Carnation Convention, receiving a certificate of merit. Don't hesitate placing your order for FRED BURKI. It will prove a good investment.

PRICE—$12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. 250 at 1000 rate. Orders filled strictly in rotation.

Nephrolepis Scottii

On Wednesday, June 1. The stock is in the finest possible condition, as a glance at the accompanying illustration shows. The small plants in the picture are fair samples of the stock I am sending out. If you have not yet sent in your order, do so at once. All orders are filled in rotation, and the earlier you get your stock the better will be your specimen plants for Fall decorative purposes.

My greenhouses are filled with plants in sizes from 2¼-inch pots to 14-inch tubs. Come and see how decorative the variety is in any stage of its growth. To see the fern is to buy it.

Strong transplanted runners from the bench or 2¼-inch pots, $4.00 per doz.; $25.00 per 100; $200.00 per 1000.

Strong 6-inch pot plants, $2.00 each; 8-inch pans, $3.50 each; 10-inch pans, $5 00 each.

I have decided to give buyers the option of taking either transplanted runners from the bench or 2¼-inch potted stock.

DRACAENA INDIVISA, 8-inch pots, 3 ft. to 4 ft. high, $1.00 to $1.50 each.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The flower market appears to have lapsed suddenly into a state of chronic midsummer dullness. Since Memorial day the demand for stock has been very slow. Enormous quantities of roses, carnations and peonies are arriving, which find poor sale. Some very fine longiflorum lilies and callas are to be had. Carnations and roses are now showing the effects of the hot weather. Our season for outdoor flowers is now at its height. Peonies are among the heaviest receipts; they are arriving at the wholesale places by the wagon loads.

There were several large decorations and also large funerals last week that helped to use up some good stock. Memorial day trade was good, but did not come up to expectations.

Various Notes.

A. W. Smith's attractive advertisement in our daily papers last week read as follows: "Two dozen fresh roses in the 'dollar box' for Saturday only." Mr. Smith said the sale was a great success.

Henry Phipps, one of our philanthropists, generously placed a large sum of money at the disposal of the Board of Directors of the Western Penitentiary, Allegheny, Pa., for the erection and maintenance of several greenhouses and a palm house in the grounds of that institute.

J. J. Higgens has taken a position with C. T. Siebert. Hoo-Hoo.

BUTTE, MONT.

Business has been very good here this season, especially at Decoration day, when everything was closed out. The Butte Floral Co. had two car loads of plants to handle, having two temporary stores. The first Crimson Ramblers sold here were theirs, offered this year and selling readily at from $4 to $8 a plant. Law Bros. and the State Nursery Co. also had large stocks and sold out quickly. It was very hard to find anything for sale after noon. This was notwithstanding that the weather was bad, cold until Friday, when it brightened up. There was a very large demand for funeral pieces.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Arnold Pierce, who has been employed by florists here, has disappeared and his wife has had no word from him in two weeks.

AUCTION!

75,000 Palms, Ferns, Etc., and 10 practically new greenhouses, to be disposed of to the highest bidder, between the hours of 2 and 7 P. M., on

10 GREENHOUSES ARE TO BE INCLUDED IN AUCTION, DIMENSIONS AS FOLLOWS.

	Cost to build, Each.	Will Sell Previous to Auction, Each.
2 25x100 ft.	$1,200.00	$300.00
3 25x115 ft.	1,500.00	320.00
2 25x100 ft.	1,500 00	325.00
3 25x150 ft.	2,100.00	500.00

Prices named include ventilators, piping, benches, etc. If not sold at above named quotations previous to auction they will then be Offered to the Highest Bidder.

I have made arrangements with a practical constructionist who will take down and deliver f. o. b. Chicago any of the before named greenhouses at the rate of 50 cts. per running foot, making a cost of only $50.00 to $75.00 for each house.

These are not old "ramshackle" broken-down houses, but practically

AS GOOD AS NEW.

Florists, Vegetable Gardeners, Etc., will find it to their advantage to investigate. Come and See for Yourself.

Previous to Auction I am willing to sell this entire plant at less than 50c on the dollar. Ten months time will be given to remove the buildings and no rent charged, or I will give a 99-year ground lease at a low figure. This is one of the best retail locations in Chicago and a money-maker for a "live" man. Investigate.

I will also sell one good horse and florists' top wagon.

WASHINGTON.

Considering the time of year, trade has been very good the past few days. This is due largely to the commencement exercises. Roses and carnations are of fairly good quality for the end of the season. As anticipated, business for Decoration day was very good, probably a little better than last year. The demand for common or low-priced flowers was extremely heavy, particularly around the markets. These flowers fit many purposes and, being very plentiful, they make decided inroads on the sales of better grades of stock. Decorations in the cemeteries were more numerous and elaborate than ever before. The plant trade was a big feature, the season being a little backward and much planting was yet to be done. The demand for bedding stock has been very heavy this season and values have been better than for several years.

Capt. Ernest had the bowlers out last Wednesday night and some very good scores were made. It is needless to say that Washington will be well represented for bowling honors at St. Louis. Following are the scores:

Player.	1st	2d	3d

COLUMBUS, O.—Rose Underwood, widow of the late John Underwood, recently published a public notice in which she says that she has been appointed administratrix of the estate and will continue the business under the old name of Underwood Bros. The latter now publish a notice that Rose Underwood has no interest in or control whatever of the business of the Underwood Bros. Floral Co., of which they have been owners for twenty-three years and of which they "propose so to remain in charge, notwithstanding" the public notice aforesaid.

WASHINGTON.

Considering the time of year, trade has been very good the past few days. This is due largely to the commencement exercises. Roses and carnations are of fairly good quality for the end of the season. As anticipated, business for Decoration day was very good, probably a little better than last year. The demand for common or low priced flowers was extremely heavy, particularly around the markets. These flowers fit many purposes and, being very plentiful, they make decided inroads on the sales of better grades of stock. Decorations in the cemeteries were more numerous and elaborate than ever before. The plant trade was a big feature, the season being a little backward and much planting was yet to be done. The demand for bedding stock has been very heavy this season and values have been better than for several years.

Capt. Ernest had the bowlers out last Wednesday night and some very good scores were made. It is needless to say that Washington will be well represented for bowling honors at St. Louis. Following are the scores:

Minder	175	128	132
Herrold	155	146	121
Lewis	160	152	148
McCardle	151	149	167
Jones	118	106	128
Clark	170	145	150
Cook	137	189	171
Shine	123	156	116
Shaffer	165	157	187
Barry	149	149	173

COLUMBUS, O.—Rose Underwood, widow of the late John Underwood, recently published a public notice in which she says that she has been appointed administratrix of the estate and will continue the business under the old name of Underwood Bros. The latter now publish a notice that Rose Underwood has no interest in or control whatever of the business of the Underwood Bros. Floral Co., of which they have been owners for twenty three years and of which they "propose so to remain in charge, notwithstanding" the public notice afore said.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

IN USING CYANIDE for fumigating a house 20x150 and thirteen feet to the ridge at the gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, it has been found a valuable aid to the even distribution of the gas to hang boards about a foot wide and five feet long above each generator and keep them swinging with a cord leading outdoors.

FAR FINER than the old type is Salvia splendens grandiflora and its brilliant scarlet calyces are much more persistent than is the old form.

W. J. GODFREY has been successful in extending the chrysanthemum season well into the new year and the Prince of Pinks is one of the results. It is purely a decorative variety, of good habit, free, of good color and very late. E. Molyneux says there is a great future for January and February flowering varieties. The N. C. S. will give an exhibition of chrysanthemums grown for market on December 14.

FUMIGATION should be practiced regularly about every fortnight, in the house of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, to prevent mite, which is a most troublesome pest if it once gets a foothold, and is not then easily eradicated.

NEW METHODS are few only, but of great economic importance. Chief among them, perhaps, is the "retarding" process, or freezing apparatus, by which many hardy shrubs, plants, bulbs, vegetables and flowers may be held inanimate for months and then brought to perfection at will. In this way we get lilac and lilies and other things any day in the year, or just when we require them. The use of ether, again, assists materially in the process of forcing or acceleration, and the electric light may, on emergency, be pressed into our service to the same end.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Ed. A. Humfeld says that spring trade has been very brisk.

HARDENING OFF.

The term, hardening off, is used, and seen in print, often enough, yet is the trouble always taken to fully realize what the expression really means? It means the preparation of tender plants to withstand exposure without being injured, and if this be so, is it at all times thoroughly understood, or properly carried into practice? We know it is not, and also that many valuable subjects of varied descriptions are annually sacrificed through carelessness or ignorance in attending to this matter.

Every one who knows anything about the nature of plants ought to know also that those, even such as are naturally hardy in cold climates, which have formed leaves and roots in a warm temperature cannot endure exposure to a much lower temperature than they have grown in without receiving more or less injury, unless they are previously inured to their altered conditions. It will be seen, then, how important it is to use good judgment in hardening off plants.

Ordinary bedding plants are sensitive; even the most hardy of these, raised in a high temperature. Those who have many of these to furnish know best how it taxes their powers to harden them satisfactorily, unless they have plenty of cool frames, or similar conveniences, at command; but, failing these, it is better to place the plants outside in the most sheltered positions available, and cover them during cold weather with old blinds, or something of the kind, than to keep them until bedding time in a close house. In many cases more mischief is apparently done to the plants, as may be seen if one of them is lifted and examined, through the check to the roots, than to that of the top growth.—Gardeners' Magazine.

MT. STERLING, KY.

The spring business has been better this year than at any time in the last ten seasons, especially in the call for well-grown plants, which has greatly exceeded the supply. Emil Frederich says that he thinks a great many growers are making a mistake in trying to stuff the market full of the "two for a nickel" kind of plants. He says that in his experience it is a great deal less work to raise 100 plants which you sell at $1.00 each than to raise 1,000 at 10 cents each and that the market for the better kind is a great deal more sure. He says that the trade does not want to buy poorer plants than those they can raise themselves and that the florist who tries to see how many plants he can crowd into a greenhouse is sure to find that he has a considerable portion of his stock to throw away at the end of each season.

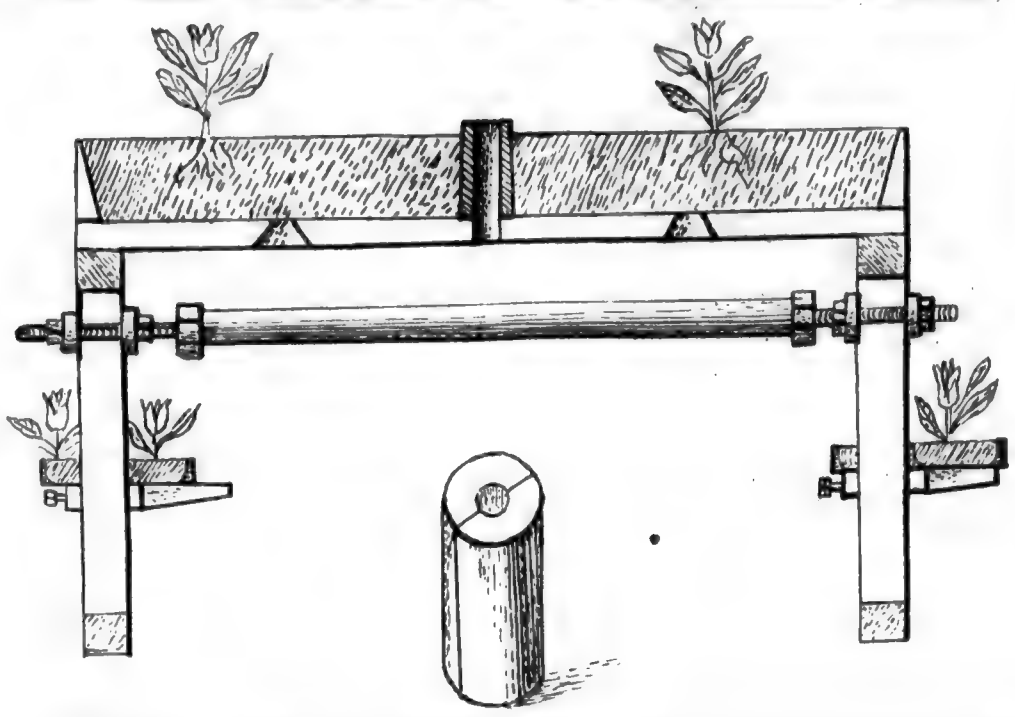
East Orange, N. J.—F. W. Massmann has sold out to George Smith and on June 11 sails for Germany with his family on the Graf Waldersee.

"Am very much pleased with the results of the advertisement; at present have no stock to offer."—Wm. A. Finger, Hicksville, L. I., N. Y.

Orchard Park, N. Y.—M. L. Hampton & Co. are removing their establishment to Springville, where they have bought the Springville Greenhouses.

Toledo, O.—Miss Julia Imoberstag and Otto Krueger were married June 5. The bride is a daughter of C. F. Imoberstag and the groom is also a prosperous member of the trade.

The Review is "it" among the trade papers. It has the most up-to-date and timely articles of general interest. I could not get along without it.—F. J. McSweeney.



"The more we advertise in the Review the more we are convinced of its advertising value. It reaches the buyers, always. We disposed of nearly 10,000 verbenas with two insertions of our classified advertisement."—Wm. Bierstadt & Son, Springfield, Ill.

I go to the Review, for I have learned by experience that it is the place to go for help in time of need; it gives help, sympathy, comfort and consolation; it finds buyers and sellers and brings them together; it keeps us posted in all lines belonging to the craft, and so I like it. —S. South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Benches for Cut Flowers.

I had something to say two weeks ago about material for benches in our houses for pot plants. It may be a little late to discourse on benches and beds for our important cut flower plants, still many will yet be built, repaired or altered. In detached three-quarter-span houses with no glass in either front or back wall, it would be useless to adopt anything but the raised bench. Some old-fashioned ranges are often seen with the houses running east and west and a five-foot wooden partition dividing each house from its neighbor. These also would be unfit for anything but raised benches. So it is with the more modern house, either those fifty or thirty feet wide, with glass almost to the ground, or the large blocks of houses covering acres, with high gutters and no partitions, that the low beds of various designs are used.

Before we go into the subject of these ground beds, as they may be called, let me say that we built last year a raised carnation bench that we like well and, although it was only old Joost we planted on it, nothing could possibly have done better. The floor of the bench is hollow brick, 15x10 inches and about two and a half inches thick, resting on 2x4 scantlings fifteen inches apart and running the length of the bench and these in turn resting on 2x6 crosspieces every five feet. The tops of the 2x4s, where the tiles rest, were most thoroughly plastered with water lime (hydraulic cement) and I believe it will outlast a board bench, except cypress, at least three times and, of course, has the most perfect system of drainage. It is as easy and comfortable to remove and renew soil as on a board or plank bench, which is not the case with round 3-inch drain tile, often used for the purpose.

While the cost of this bench is not as great as of the one described two weeks ago, nor yet is it as lasting, but it is about twenty-five per cent more than one of 2-inch plank.

Few Really Solid Beds.

Before we discuss the different kinds of these low beds I want to say that where there are tile, ashes or rubble stone between the soil of the beds and mother earth they cannot be called "solid" beds and there are comparatively few who use the actual solid beds for either roses, carnations or chrysanthemums. Yet there are a few, and some of the most successful. It is worth mentioning that one of the few who are notably successful is in central New York. The soil on which the houses are built is naturally good and made better by deep plowing and working in plenty of animal manure. Then the houses are built with high gutters and no partitions. Then the beds are laid out with a 6-inch board for the edge and five or six inches of soil goes on top of the already enriched surface soil.

These roses last for five or six years, perhaps more. These are truly solid beds and, as their product has brought the highest price in New York City, you can only say that "nothing succeeds like success." The steam pipes are on the posts that support the gutters, two or three feet above the level of the beds. Vigor of growth, size of foliage and length of stem is wonderful, as the writer has often witnessed. With all this success, there are few who can follow the plan and there are some peculiarities of culture that are unique that I could not attempt to explain or advise.

When the pipes are on the posts only and all of them at least two feet above the surface of the beds, no matter whether they are solid beds or have tile beneath, the radiation of heat from the pipes is so directly vertical, or upward to the roof, that there is a suspicion that the atmosphere may be stagnant, without that free circulation of air so beneficial to plant growth. For instance, plants of almost all kinds if put up on a shelf near the glass, if not neglected for water, will outstrip in robustness of growth those on benches near the ground. It is not the increased light or nearness to the glass that has benefited these plants, but a freer and purer circulation of air on all sides of them.

With all this evidence that light and the better and purer circulation of air is near the glass, the roses in the solid beds, quoted above and whose luxuriance of flower and foliage could not be excelled, disproves the theory that your rose or carnation beds must be raised two or three feet above the surface of the house.

I am going to dismiss these solid beds by saying that for the general grower they are not to be recommended, for very few have suitable conditions and as ninety per cent of all roses are planted annually, and all carnations, then this great depth of soil is time and material wasted, as it has been proven beyond all question that four or five inches of soil will grow roses, carnations or chrysanthemums equal to the greatest skill or methods yet known.

Low Beds or Benches.

And now we come to the low beds, or benches, with drainage of some kind beneath the plants and only four or five inches of soil for the plants, which are by no means solid beds. And where houses are constructed so that they get the direct sun on these low beds it must be a great advantage to adopt them. I can't believe there will be much difference in the product of these beds and would advise the use of whatever material is cheapest and most available in your locality. It must be admitted the rotting out of wooden benches is not only costly in material used, but the time and labor to rebuild them. At the same time, too costly a bed or bench, with the view to permanency, in many cases is not advisable, for the evolution of greenhouse architecture and methods has been so rapid of late that you don't know how soon you may want to adopt some other plan. Old brick and tile can be used again. Old boards and planks are utterly useless.

The Ideal Bed.

The ideal bed for roses or carnations, in my humble opinion, is that so largely used at the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont. First, two or three tiers of common brick are laid along for the sides of the bed. The space to the top of the bricks is filled in solid with any old soil you happen to have. On this soil, and projecting to the outer edge of the brick wall 3-inch round drain tiles are laid touching each other, and for an edge is five inches of cement, two inches wide on the tiles, tapering to one inch at the top. This would bring the surface of the bed, if three bricks were used, about eighteen inches above the paths, a most convenient height for roses or carnations.

Rose House at the Establishment of John Breitmeyer's Sons, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

We have used two bricks for the wall and, instead of 3-inch round tile, a hollow brick five inches broad, four inches thick and twelve inches long. We prefer the hollow brick but either must be the best of drainage. Instead of the five inches of cement for the edge, just place a 2x6 scantling on the edge of the hollow bricks. True, this scantling will rot, but not for six or seven years, and that is quite a time to look forward to when it is so easily replaced. This bed last described costs about thirty per cent more than one built of 2-inch hemlock plank.

Another ground bench is four bricks laid up in cement for the sides of the bed. Then six inches of rubble stone is filled in and on top of the stone five inches of soil for your plants. Now, you may not have the stone on your farm, but if you have, this bed will cost one-half the cheapest wooden bench you could possibly build and, as for drainage, I think the rubble stone the most perfect of all. I am aware that where stone is not plentiful, clinkers and coarse ashes have been used with success, yet I can't speak from experience, as is the case with the stone.

Air Not the Essential.

Just let me say here that we attach no importance to the fall of the air passing through the drain tiles or hollow bricks. We would not seal up the ends of the tiles to prevent it, but can see nothing essential or beneficial in it. The drainage is in and through between the tiles, and as for air at the roots, they will get all they want from the surface, the natural way, and so these little brick walls about eleven inches high with six inches of rubble stone need no tiles to ventilate the bed, as we have seen done.

It is only justice to what I have been asserting to say that last summer we built two of these brick beds with stone for drainage. Each bed was 5x125 feet, a nice width, and although planted altogether too late with Lawson carnations from 4-inch pots, nothing could have done better and the quality of bloom and strength of growth showed they were enjoying their environment, and are doing so to this day. The most orthodox believer in the raised wooden bench with 2x6 plank for a bottom would not assert that the space of one-half or three-quarters of an inch between the boards or planks was anything but for drainage, and this six inches of stone is infinitely better drainage than the boards.

Another Good Bench.

Still another. Supposing from one cause or another you have no time, or perhaps none of the needful, to build the brick and tile bench, or the much cheaper one with the little brick walls and stone drainage. Then what's the matter with putting up a 12-inch plank for the side of the bed and filling in with six or seven inches of rubble stone or crushed stone or clinkers? The plank will last at least six years and will answer all the purposes of the brick wall and, although the cost of material will not be so different, the cost and time of putting it in place will be one-tenth that of the brick. Where stone is not found on the land, there may be stone quarries in the neighborhood where the "chip" stone is sold cheap enough. Where there is neither, there may be brickyards where spoiled and imperfect bricks are sold cheap, and if none of these, you have clinkers and the coarsest of last winter's ashes. The quality of soil you use, combined with your skill and, more than all, care, is what will count for your success or failure.

Those who have been uniformly successful with the fast decaying, awkward to work, laborious to fill and empty, raised wooden benches are slow to believe in any other. Yet I can but foresee that the three-quarter-span, long-slope-to-the-south house and the step ladder benches are fast disappearing and where the modern range of two or three acres without a partition, devoted to one class of plants, or the still more modern fifty-feet-wide house with glass almost to the ground, the raised benches are two feet of folly, expense and worry.

William Scott.

WORK WITH BEAUTY.

Planting, which should constitute the largest part of the work during the rest of the month, should be vigorously pushed, so that the young stock may make some headway before the real hot weather commences. Every day of delay now is curtailing the growing season, cutting off, in fact, the best and most active part of it, especially so in the case of Beauties, which should have a long season of growth to develop a stocky, bushy plant before putting them into crop, if we desire to have them in good bearing shape by the holiday season, when the demand is good and prices fair.

During this month, when the majority of the larger growers have replanted their houses, there is frequently a demand for Beauties and other roses which is an inducement to defer planting for a week or two, under the impression that this is a saving method and that by greater care and attention to the young stock they can be made to catch up with the earlier planted stock. A few seasons of experience and careful comparison where strict records are kept will prove this to be a fallacy, as the returns invariably show in favor of early planting.

Beauties which are late in being planted must, in order to catch up, even in appearance with early planted stock, require more care, attention and coddling and are usually hustled along at such a rapid rate that the growth is too soft and spongy to enter on the winter with a fair chance to set their buds in time for the best and most remunerative market of the season.

To secure a really good quality of wood for this purpose plenty of ventilation, both day and night, is absolutely necessary and if the nights are too cold to admit of this without firing, it is a poor system of economy to withhold heat, and this applies not only to Beauty growing but to all classes of roses under glass.

Being a rapid grower and a gross feeder the Beauty requires large supplies of water to keep the food in an assimilable form, and the soil cool. This liberal use of water also entails persistent cultivation of the surface to keep it sweet and free from caking, which, next to ventilation and watering, is one of the most important essentials in Beauty growing. This should be continued until the bench is so well filled with roots that further cultivation might be injurious.

To prevent the insidious attacks of thrips, fumigating should be systematically practiced. A light application once a week, if done during the early morning, when the house is comparatively dry and the glass cool, will keep such pests as thrips and greenfly from giving much trouble.

To keep spider in check the syringe must be used every day during bright weather and during hot spells a second syringing during the afternoon will be of great benefit, helping to cool the house, recharge the air with moisture, refreshing the foliage and giving it that firm and rubbery texture so noticeable in well handled stock. To be effective syringing must be accompanied by a good force of water, sufficient to dislodge the spider and break up the web under which the eggs are deposited, and be so directed that the under sides of the leaves receive the full force of the spray. In order to accomplish this with safety, so that none of the young, sappy shoots may be broken, tying should be strictly attended to.

Many of the younger and less experienced growers are under the impression that the successful Beauty grower possesses some weighty secret which enables him to produce such perfect blooms and which he religiously guards from the knowledge of the uninitiated. I am frequently accused by this class of growers of withholding this secret. "You don't give it all away in your notes," is the comment. Now the most successful growers of this rose never claim, nor do they possess, any such secret. It is by strict attention to the details, carefully observing the habits, and supplying the wants of the plants at the proper time, and the exercise of sound judgment, never forgetting that no condition or circumstance in the cultivation of this imperial rose is of so little importance as not to be worthy of being carefully noted for future use; that is what gives them the knowledge which constitutes the ability to grow Beauty with success.

PENTSTEMONS FOR CUTTING.

Will pentstemons bloom under glass and bloom as freely as snapdragons? I want scarlet and yellow flowers. The house is very high and we have bright sunshine all winter. I did well with sweet peas, six feet high and a white sheet of bloom. I thought a scarlet larkspur and lupinus. Any suggestions will be gratefully received. A. C.

Pentstemons are among the prettiest and most free-flowering of our hardy border perennials where they are hardy. Most of the species are said to be hardy in New York state, but with us they are not and they have to be protected in a cold frame during winter and planted out in spring. They may be grown under glass for cut flowers, yet the writer cannot remember seeing it done. We think they could be flowered quite easily in the early spring months in a light house and a moderate temperature, not over 45 to 50 degrees at night. For the amateur private gardener this may be very interesting, but commercially we don't think it would pay. Although many of the species are beautiful, it would be best to try the large-flowered garden hybrids. It is rather late now to sow the seed, so obtain small plants from a firm which makes a specialty of perennial and herbaceous plants. Plant them out where you can give them water in the hot, dry weather and lift and put on the benches before severe frost. I do not promise this will be as successful as your sweet peas. W. S.

PROPER FLORAL DESIGNS.

What is good taste in this matter and why? How is one to judge new designs and the reason? When a customer asks for your judgment, what would you suggest as most appropriate, profitable to you, and at the same time in reasonable keeping with good taste and progress? Why should you discourage the use of certain designs, and urge the use of others?

The use of flowers at funerals is to suggest the brighter and better side of even these dark events; therefore, use only those arrangements which suggest hopeful and sunny thoughts. Avoid suggesting the circumstances of death. Some people in ordering funeral flowers seem to have a morbid desire to remind the family and friends of the manner and details of the sad event. I once knew a thoughtless friend to order a cradle filled with flowers to be sent to a child's funeral. Anyone can imagine the result. Give that emblem the most frequent use which suggests the sweetest, most poetic and restful ideas.

Among the best designs of this type are the pillow, which is properly the family piece; the wreath, harp, lyre, heart, book, anchor, cross, only for its adherents; basket, star, shield, column, crescent, the simpler lodge and society emblems, urn and numerous styles of loose clusters. Of course there are others. Among the less desirable are the gates ajar, chair, sickle, ax, broken wheel, and what is often asked for now, the elk's head. The latter is among the intricate mechanical designs which are to be avoided if possible.

In discussing the points of a design with a customer strive to attract his attention to the beauty of arrangement rather than to excite admiration for odd designs. Educate your customers to appreciate the how and why of certain combinations and arrangements far more than the mere machinery and construction. Take every opportunity to draw their attention to blend of colors and grace of form. Talk up the good points in your design work, as an artist or a sculptor would do. Be a member of the nearest art society, and don't be too bashful about bringing and keeping your own art before the public eye. To put out your design work in the best shape is just as important and practical as to know the latest devices in steam heating.

The sheaf of wheat, with or without flowers, is a good design to suggest for an elderly person's funeral. Use with a square bow of wide lavender or purple ribbon, tulle or cord, with a bow knot of smilax, or with long-stemmed flowers scattered among the wheat. Sometimes the quantity of flowers to be used with the sheaf is large enough when bunched and laid over the sheaf, to completely hide the wheat. In such a case substitute a smaller sized sheaf, bunch the flowers as you would for an ordinary cluster, and tie the sheaf over the stem ends, preferably without ribbon.

Make it your settled policy to discourage the use of any designs, that is designs made on frames, under about $5. Even for that amount your customer will get better value in a cluster of loose flowers than in a design, and you will be the gainer in time and temper.

Designs, except for the better class of funeral work, are now almost entirely discarded. In wedding decorations they are usually displaced by a lavish use of green and long-stemmed flowers. If a design is insisted upon, suggest a bell, lovers' knot or yoke. Of these three, the first is much the best; the bell is a poetical and suggestive design, or rather a cluster of bells of different sizes, numbering about five or seven. Hang as though all were ringing at once, some swinging one way and some another. To be more economical as well as artistic, cover single wire bell frames with tin foil or gold foil and hang them in place as they are. Trail vines and flowers along the suspending wire among the bells and down and around the walls and woodwork nearby. Do not attempt to fill a bell solid with flowers under $12 to $15.

You will be besieged about this time of the year to make mottoes and various impossible emblems for graduating exercises. The average class motto is difficult of reduction to floral art. We do not claim to be able to "hitch your wagon to a star," or launch the innocents on life's sea, all with flowers. They will be just as well off a week hence if you persuade them to accept a stage setting of palms and roses arranged in keeping with the present state of civilization. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

SPANISH IRIS.

I have read your article relating to the forcing of the iris of Spain in the first days of the second half of May, the bulbs being planted in October. I would be very much obliged to you if you would give me the following information. At which time of the year is it convenient to cover the bulbs with fertilizer? The leaves are already out of the earth here in November and do not fear the winter. I would like to obtain flowers of iris as early as possible in April. Which are among the best varieties with white flowers and blue flowers? You would oblige me very much by giving me the most explicit information on the operation to obtain that result. FRANCE.

Although kindly translated by the French consul at Chicago I yet had difficulty in fully making out the specific meaning of some of the questions. If your paper grows in the future correspondingly with the past few years you will undoubtedly keep a staff of Slavonic, Latin and Scandinavian interpreters for the advantage of your European and transcaspian subscribers.

Perhaps the best way I can help this gentleman with my knowledge of Spanish iris is to say that in our climate in the fall of 1900 I planted several thousands in the open ground about the middle of November. The soil was a heavy, rich loam that had been well prepared the previous spring with animal manure. I can scarcely believe that if the bulbs are sound and of good size its quality would make much difference to the flowers produced the following spring. About the time heavy frost occurred we put three inches of stable litter over the beds, but that did not prevent frost from penetrating the ground at least a foot, so the bulbs are perfectly hardy. They did not flower with us till June 20. Beautiful as they are, they are so late in flowering that they are not desirable as spring flowering bulbs because they do not admit of the summer flowering plants occupying the beds.

I don't know the part of France this subscriber resides in, yet I do know there is a great difference between the climate of Brittany and Normandy and the southern provinces bordering on the Pyrenees. It seems to me, in any part of France, that if these irises were planted in frames in October, protected from hard freezing up to February 1 and then glass put over them, that they could be had in flower by the middle of April. You can buy them in several colors and it is merely a matter of guess what will be in most demand. We think the white and blue are most admired. As a forcing bulb they are not a great success and it is difficult with us to get them into flower before April 1. In the open ground no fertilizer is needed in the spring.

COMMERCIAL FLOWERS.

It is safe to say that the greatest part of the flowers sold commercially are grown from plants set out after the middle of June and, considering the comparatively short time they have to grow, the results are remarkable. Conditions with the commercial grower are very different to those governing the private individual, who only grows a few plants and does not have to worry about the outcome of the crop financially. The margin in growing for the market is today so small that it sometimes calls for some close figuring to determine whether or not a crop has paid for handling.

A good deal depends on what is used to fill the houses in the winter time, after the chrysanthemums are marketed. Some use the space to good advantage in handling bedding plants, others grow lettuce, or tomatoes, or carnations that have been carried along in pots until they can be planted in the benches. While it may seem out of place at this time to be discussing what crop to follow with, instead of the chrysanthemum crop itself, still the careful man is he who plans long enough ahead so that he is not caught unawares.

I have several times been asked how much I think the grower should receive for a crop of flowers of the best possible grade, that is to say of the exhibition size and finish, and my answer is $50 per hundred, wholesale, and I do not believe there is much of a future in growing them for that. For the past year or two very few flowers have wholesaled at that figure in New York, or anywhere else, so far as I can find out. The question for the grower to figure out is whether it will pay him better to plant ten inches apart, keep to one stem and grow the very best flowers, than to plant closer, run two or more stems to a plant and take about three medium flowers from the same bench space that he would take one.

Every grower must be influenced by his market, though personally I always like to grow the best only, and this will probably hold true for anyone shipping to a wholesale market. In times of excessive glut the best flowers will always sell, even though they may sometimes run much lower in value than they should, while small, poor stock has to be mercilessly sacrificed and sometimes never sold at all. There always seem to be more than enough poor mums from the time the market opens till it closes, though one can once in a while make a ten strike with the special stock.

The florists living in smaller towns can generally do much better with a medium grade of flowers, though I would advise anyone to have a few just as fine as it is possible to get them for the sake of the advertising they give. Such flowers often prove valuable in educating your customers up to a better grade of stock at a correspondingly enhanced price. The provincial florist finds he can sell ten flowers for a quarter each to one at 50 or 75 cents each, and grows accordingly, and many of them can use best a grade that runs much cheaper, even, than that.

The chrysanthemum has come to be so generally regarded as a cheap flower that some people will exhibit a tendency to heart failure if asked to pay a good price for good stock and they profess to see no difference between your good flowers and the rubbish the street man is selling outside the door. If every grower grew good flowers, would not try to undersell his competitor and preached the gospel of good flowers at a fair price there would be more money in growing chrysanthemums.

We hear sometimes of a new variety that is particularly recommended as a commercial sort. I have never yet solved the problem of what constitutes the difference between a commercial and an exhibition variety. I realize that some varieties do not ship well and cannot stand the rough usage that market flowers are subjected to; but, admitted that for a shipping trade one has to grow incurving varieties, why on earth has every florist in the country to blindly follow someone else's lead and grow just Appleton, Eaton and one or two others when he can sell his flowers direct from the plants at home without having to face the problem of shipping them away?

The general public is always attracted by the odd colors in an exhibition and does it not follow that they would buy them more readily than the eternal white and yellow if they could only get them? Why not experiment in this line a little? I had a conversation the other day with a florist who grows several houses of mums for his home trade and it developed that he runs almost entirely on what are generally classed as exhibition kinds, fanciful shapes and colors, and, what is most important, he is making money. He has discovered that his customers are always craving for something new and distinct and his customers have discovered that they can depend on him to supply flowers that they cannot buy elsewhere; the result is pleasing to both parties.

Why do not other florists with a home trade do likewise? I have personally sold at a good price varieties like Nellie Pockett and Mrs. T. W. Pockett, kinds that the average wholesale grower does not dream of growing, as they have not been officially classed as commercial varieties. My idea of a commercial variety is one that sells, no matter what its shape and color, though if one has to ship the flowers any distance to market, kinds like Eaton or Appleton will stand more hard knocks than the loose petalled varieties.

ALPINE PLANTS.

Among hardy perennials and shrubby plants we have many which love to live on ledges and rocks, or between crevices. They call them alpines because a great many of them grow on the highest Alps and near the region of snow, at elevations of 13,000 feet or more. There are some which cannot be cultivated in the New England states, but a great many of them, under a skillful cultivator's hand, will give good results. It is not my intention to say that these plants are all useful for the florists' trade, or to use a more vulgar expression, commercially, but for the individual who loves plants and can appreciate their beauty, however inconspicuous their flowers may be, they are interesting and we certainly have among the alpines many gems.

The most common way of cultivating alpines is upon what are called rockeries, or rough stones laid together in different forms and methods. No wood or tree roots should be used to supplement any of them. They must be all stone. The kind of stone is seldom a matter of importance; everyone will use what is most convenient. The rougher and more unshapely the blocks the better. They must be firmly wedged and interlocked and depend upon one another, and not on the soil between them, to keep them in their places. This rule is of the utmost importance and if it be neglected, a long frost or an excessive rainfall may cause the whole structure to collapse.

Wherever there is a steep bank, facing south or east, it may be utilized for the growth of alpines. The stones, as before advised, should be large and unshapely and should be buried to two-thirds of their bulk and form a very uneven surface, all being interlocked from top to bottom. Rockeries of this form are less liable to suffer from drought. If the surface covered is large, access to all parts should be provided by means of convenient paths or stepping stones, because, although every stone in the structure should be capable of bearing the weight of a heavy man without danger of displacement, it is better not to have to tread upon the surface.

With regard to soil, we must take care that it does not retain stagnant moisture, and yet it must not dry up too readily. Plants should be able to penetrate it easily with their roots. Good loam with a little humus in the form of leafmold or peat and half or three-quarters of the whole composed of stone riddlings, make up a soil in which most alpines are quite contented. Where we are convinced that lime is useful it may be added as pure lime, not planting until the same is thoroughly slaked by mixture with the soil. Rough surface dressing is a thing in which all alpines delight, as it keeps the surface of the soil sweet and moist and prevents their leaves being fouled. Use for this purpose the same riddled stone as mentioned before, which is better than gravel, as round stones are easily washed off the slope.

Now a few words about planting. It is better not to be in a hurry to see the stones covered. It would be easy to cover them with growth in a single season, but it would be harmful to the cultivator. We must not degrade choice alpines by putting them to keep company with vinca, galium, hypericum, glechoma, fast running sedums, Campanula rapunculoides, Hieracium aurantiacum and others of the same habit. Indeed, there are some plants, of which Coronilla varia is one, which, when once established among large stones, cannot be eradicated by any means short of pulling the whole structure to pieces. Any plant which runs under a large stone and reappears on the other side should be treated cautiously. As a rule nothing should be planted which cannot be easily and entirely eradicated in a short time. If a rockery is large there is no reason for limiting the area to be assigned to each plant, especially to such as are ornamental when in flower and not unsightly at other seasons. If different rockeries, or separate parts of the same, can be assigned to rapid growers and to dwarf, compact plants it will be an advantage.

There are many subjects belonging to the class of rock plants (alpine), which require to be displayed in a broad and high mass to do them full justice. Aubrietias, for example, or Veronica prostrata, should look like purple or blue cataracts; others should be unlimited in breadth, like the dwarf, mossy phloxes, or the silvery Cerastium Biebersteinii. Such things do not like being cropped around to limit their growth and if there is not enough room for them, they had better be omitted.

Whatever is grown, the small and delicate gems of the collection must run no danger of being smothered by overspreading neighbors and require both careful management and constant watching. The following species may be mentioned as suitable for cultivation:

Achillea Egyptiaca is a silvery plant in all its parts, with finely cut leaves and handsome heads of yellow flowers and with something of the grace of a fern in its leaves. Plant in sunny spots. A. tomentosa is one of the tufted plants, with flat corymbs of bright-yellow flowers. A millefolium The Pearl has white heads, and A. millefolium roseum, red. This is good for cutting purposes. A. ageratifolia, A. aurea and A. rupestris are other desirable varieties.

Adonis vernalis is a handsome plant, requiring moist, sandy soil and should not be disturbed for years. Ajuga reptans and A. Genevensis are of easy culture. Alyssum saxatile is one of the best of the early yellow spring flowers. Good anemones are Japonica, pulsatilla, nemorosa, hepatica and Virginiana. Anemonella thalictroides and antennarias, the latter with white, downy foliage, effective for carpeting, are good. The anthericums, or St. Bruno's lilies, are graceful, lily-like alpine pasture plants, among the most beautiful of hardy flowers. Though rather taller than most rock plants, their alpine association as well as their beauty should give them a place among the more vigorous plants or among the rock garden shrubs. The best varieties of this genus for outdoor culture are A. Hookerii, A. liliastrum, A. liliago and A. ramosum. Anthyllis vulneraria and A. montana are well worth growing.

Aquilegias, beautiful in habit, color and form of flower, are widely distributed over the northern and mountain regions of Europe, Asia and America. These require to be carefully planted in sandy or gritty though moist ground and in well-drained pockets in the rock garden in half shady positions. Good species to grow are A. canadensis, A. chrysantha, A. cærulea and A. glandulosa. The latter is a native of the Altai mountains of Siberia and is a fine rock garden plant in well-drained, deep, sandy soil.

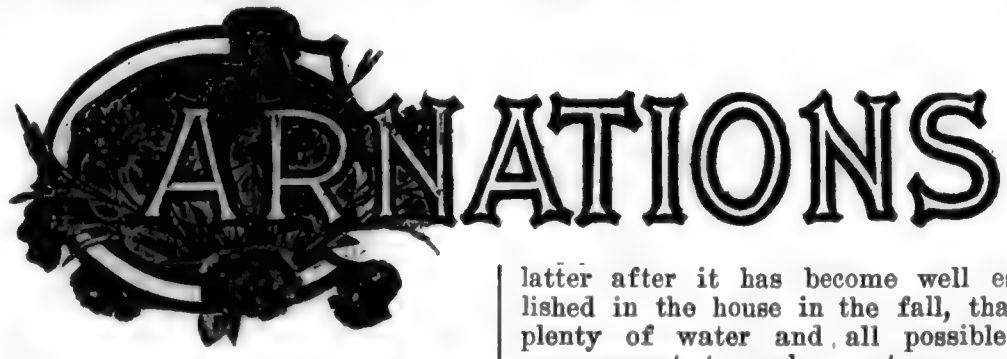
Arabis alpina is very early flowering and of easiest culture in rather dry soil. Arctostaphylos Uva-Ursi is a small, trailing evergreen with shining, coriaceous leaves and flesh-colored flowers and grows well in dry soil. The armerias are a handsome group of alpines, flowering from June to August. They like warm, sandy soil. Good species to grow are A. cephalotes, A. vulgaris, A. Laucheana, A. dianthoides and A. plantaginea. Asperula cynanchica and A. odorata are useful.

The large genus aster contains many good plants worth cultivating. The later varieties can be arranged in the background of the alpine garden. Here our native species show their forms in gracefulness and color, and among these are lævis, multiflorus, turbinellus, paniculatus, dumosus, vimineus, ericoides, polyphyllus, corymbosus, diffusus, undulatus, spectabilis, Shortii, Novæ-Angliæ, patens, ptarmicoides and sericeus. Among European varieties A. alpinus, A. amellus, A. Bessarabicus and the Japanese A. Maackii. In half shady spots may be grown the charming A. Stracheyi, four to six inches high, a native of the western Himalayas.

About the genus aubrietia Dr. Wm. Robinson says: "If there were but one family of rock plants known to us, this, which gladdens the rocks of Greece and all near countries with its soft colors in the dawn of spring, would be almost enough to justify the lovers of rock plants for any extravagance in their behalf. In these plants all difficulties of culture, increase, soil, etc., fly away, and, though from the hills above the cities of Greece, on the sites ennobled in human story, they are as happy in our land as the grasses of our fields. There is hardly a position selected for a rock plant that may not be graced by them." A. deltoidea grandiflora and A. deltoidea Campbelli are the best varieties.

Campanula alpina, C. carpatica, C. rotundifolia, C. cæspitosa, C. Rainerii and C. pulla are good rock plants. Calamintha glabella, Chimaphila maculata, Cornus canadensis and C. Suecica are all good. Colchicum autumnale thrives well in a moist, rich soil. Coptis trifolia and Corydalis nobilis are two gems. Corydalis fabacea, from Sweden, loves a shady spot. Cotoneaster buxifolia and C. rotundifolia are reliable.



Cypripediums must not be omitted. Suitable species are C. acaule, C. spectabile, C. pubescens, C. arietinum and C. montanum. Cytisus scoparius and C. albus are good. Dalibarda repens likes deep, peaty soil, while the pretty Daphne Cneorum delights in a calcareous soil. Dentaria bulbifera, D. diphylla and D. maxima are interesting. Dianthus contains some useful subjects, such as D. arenarius, D. deltoides, D. plumarius, D. proliferus and D. superbus. The latter is liable to perish in winter in rich, moist soil. Dicentras are very ornamental. D. cucullaria and D. eximia should be in every garden. Dodecatheon Meadia and D. integrifolium are well known. Dracocephalum Altaiense, native of Siberia, will not be frozen out in New England. Dryas octopetala prefers moist, peaty soil. Epigæa repens, or Mayflower, is the member of the Ericaceæ most dear to New England people, with its delicate fragrance and pretty flowers. It does not transplant easily.

Epimediums like peat and shade. Gaultheria procumbens needs a peat soil pocket. Some of the gems of the alpine garden are found among the gentians. They are hard to cultivate and impatient of disturbance. G. acaulis, from the Alps; G. linearis and G. Andrewsii, from New England; G. Pneumonanthe, G. nivalis and G. tenella, from Swedish mountains, will grow in moist soil battered in the rocks.

Geranium maculatum and G. sanguineum are handsome, species to be recommended. Helleborus orientalis and H. viridis are useful in spring. Houstonia cærulea will thrive in a moist spot. Iberis sempervirens is one of the best dwarf perennials grown; it makes a grand rock plant. There are a good many irises, which, in spring and early summer, brighten up the rock garden; such are the native I. cristata, versicolor and many more; also I. Germanica, I. pumila, I. Histrio and I. Sibirica.

In Switzerland there grows a plant, the flower heads of which are enveloped in woolly bracts and which in botanical language is given the name Leontopodium alpinum, or Gnaphalium Leontopodium, but by the inhabitants it is called the edelweiss, "noble white." It likes a firm, well-drained light, calcareous soil. The more lime or chalk the soil contains the brighter and purer white are the flower bracts. By natural habit it is a true perennial, but it seems to me better to handle it as a biennial. What leontopodium wants, as nearly all alpine plants want, is a dry base. It may, therefore, be desirable for all (save edelweiss) to take them up in fall and winter them inside.

Having already taxed your patience severely, and as time will not permit a continuance of this alphabetical list, I shall be pleased to do so on some future occasion.

SEASONABLE CULTURE.

Now that you have all your young plants out and started off nicely there is plenty to do to keep you busy until housing time. You need not be idle one minute for want of something to do. Don't forget that it is impossible to cultivate them too much. At least once each week, and oftener if it rains, you should run through them as soon after each rain as you can work the ground. Then you can go through them occasionally with the hoe and loosen up the soil between the plants in the row and hoe out the weeds.

We have had plenty of rain so far in our locality and during this time is when you should be getting your soil into good condition to withstand a long, dry spell, as it may come almost any time and it would be strange if it did not come some time during July or August. Keep the soil worked loose, so that every rain can soak in to be used later on, when no water comes from above for a while. Cultivate deeply.

The plants we set out first are growing into fine, bushy plants and after making another lot of breaks as a result of the topping they are getting now they will be large enough to house if we are ready to house them. Keep them topped close, however, clear up to housing time, so the plants will be stocky and short.

If you have some planted for fall blooming outside you should not top them any more, but let them come as fast as they want to. If a dry spell sets in, give them a good soaking every few days to help them along. These will appreciate it as they are not intended to be lifted later on. You want to keep them growing as strong as you can.

There is a vast difference between the plant which is to bloom where it stands and the one which is being prepared to undergo transplanting with the least possible check. You want to handle the former much the same as you do the latter after it has become well established in the house in the fall, that is, plenty of water and all possible encouragement to make a strong growth and a heavy crop of large blooms. If you have some old stable manure it will be very beneficial to mulch them about an inch thick with it, to keep them from drying out and a little extra food won't hurt them.

Under no conditions, however, should you apply the above treatment to the plants which you expect to house later on. The one word "cultivate" embraces the whole field treatment of these plants and the more you practice it the better will be your plants. Mind, I don't say larger, but better. The largest is not always the best and especially is this true in this case. Just the same as a large bloom without substance is not so desirable as a medium-sized bloom which can be shipped across the continent. A. F. J. Baur.

SNAILS.

Please tell us what to apply for snails in a bed of carnations. They are right in the heart of the blossoms and eat them badly. I hand-pick them every morning but there are as many more the next morning. Please answer in the Review, as it may benefit someone else with like trouble. A. L. S.

I have many snails in my carnation benches. What shall I do to get rid of them. J. G. A.

Snails are among the most disagreeable greenhouse pests, and they are not easy to combat. Hand picking is, of course, effective as far as you are able to find them, but "each morning there seems to be as many as ever before." You can destroy many by spraying the plants with some poison, like Paris green, diluted in water, and you can keep them down by dusting the plants thoroughly with tobacco dust or lime. They will not travel where there is much dust, as it adheres to them on account of the slimy substance they are covered with. Strong salt water will kill them, too, but you must pick the blooms close before applying it. When you replant the house be sure you give all the woodwork a good coating of hot lime wash and throw plenty of slaked lime around under the benches and in the dark corners; that's where they hide mostly. If you can do it, let the house dry out thoroughly before refilling it. Snails like darkness and moisture, as is shown by their habit of spending most of their time under boards and in cellars, etc. If you can empty the house entirely when refilling a good sulphur fumigating will also help materially.

BUG EATS BLOOM.

My carnations are greatly troubled by an insect in the form of a green lady bug. From this time until after the chrysanthemums are through blooming this pest gives me much trouble, eating the petals from the flower. Advice as to a remedy would be very acceptable. G. A. D.

I am not sure that I know just how you are situated nor am I familiar with the bug you are troubled with. If your plants are growing in the open it will naturally be much harder to combat the pest than if the plants are growing in the greenhouse. Since the bug is a chewer I would naturally suppose that the most effective remedy would be to poison them. Either spray them in the evening with Paris green, about a good teaspoonful to three gallons of water, or dust them with slugshot or hellebore. If you are cutting and selling the blooms the spraying would be the best, as it does not show so much on the growth.

A. F. J. BAUR.

SPLIT STEMS.

I send some carnation plants from cuttings made in November, taken from the bench as soon as rooted and planted in good sandy loam. They seem to split. I am also troubled with dry rot or stem rot. The rose cuttings suffer the same way. N. J. M.

I am sure I could not tell you what could have caused the base of the stem on your carnation cuttings to split. I have never seen anything like it before. They looked to me as though they had been split with a knife when the cuttings were made, but I presume such was not the case, else you would not complain of it. There was also a plain case of stem rot on all the cuttings and if the cuttings were mine I would be tempted to fire the whole batch into the boiler. They will give you trouble all through the season and will never amount to anything. There is plenty of good, healthy stock offered at reasonable prices and it will pay you well to buy new, healthy stock of the varieties which are affected.

Peach Thomas Rivers, Grown by Wm. Turner at the Borden Place, Oceanic, N. J.

SOME JERSEY ESTATES.

Calling on William Turner, at Oceanic, we found him with two houses of peaches and nectarines sprayed with the salt, lime, sulphur solution, fifteen pounds salt, twenty pounds sulphur and forty pounds of lime to sixty gallons of water. Most of the wood smaller than a lead pencil was killed. The stronger wood and flower buds were not affected at all. It is rather curious, as the writer of this had the same experience, but mine were much more damaged as they were sprayed twice. His early peaches are Dutches of York, a new seedling of Thomas Rivers, and Hale's Early, ten days later. For a late peach Thomas Rivers beats any peach grown under glass. They are about twelve inches in circumference and of the finest flavor, shape and color. Some of them weigh fifteen ounces.

There are three graperies here. The early varieties are Black Hamburg, Buckland Sweetwater and Boynton Muscat. His main crop varieties are Madresfield Court and Muscat of Alexandria. About fourteen varieties in all are grown here. Pineapple fruit, which is seldom grown in houses in this country, can, in season, be seen here grown to perfection. Mr. Turner has had fruit which weighed from nine to twelve pounds. He has three houses with melons and has melons the whole year around, even through the dark days of December and January. Cucumbers, beans, tomatoes, cauliflower and lettuce are also grown under glass.

Roses, violets and carnations are grown extensively. Mr. Turner is noted for his fine carnations. He plants Prosperity in boxes four feet long, the depth seven inches, the width six. We never saw such a crop of bloom on Prosperity. Not so much grass as in benches, the growth goes right to flowering stem. Orchids are grown in large quantities for cut flowers, mostly cattleyas, lælias and cypripediums. About 200 Odontoglossum grande are grown in a house on the north side of a rose house and a finer lot cannot be found in this country; some of the flowers last fall measured seven inches across. They are grown in Belgian leaf-mold.

The collection of palms is one of the finest in this country, including Kentia Alberta, K. Duckhamii, K. Sanderiana, K. Macarthuri, K. Kirsteniana, which looks more like a caryota than a kentia; Phœnix Rœbelenii, P. rupicola with twenty feet spread, the finest Chamærops humilis in this country, about thirty-six feet in circumference, and many more. There are twenty-eight houses in all and everything raised on the place is used by the owner, M. C. D. Borden. This is one of the finest ranges of houses in any private place in the country, with all the latest improvements, 700 incandescent lamps lighting the greenhouses. Mr. Turner has charge of the whole place, also of an extensive farm.

G. H. Hale is superintendent of the E. D. Adams' estate. This is one of the most beautifully laid out places in this vicinity. Some of the finest evergreens and conifers can be seen there. Six houses are in this place, one house with cypripediums and a few other orchids, a plant house in which are some fine novelties, two graperies, one just started, and a house of cut flowers. We saw there about 150 Primula obconica grandiflora which is a fine thing and ought to be more grown for cut flowers. The stems are about fifteen inches long and blooms all winter, seeds to be sown in March. Mr. Hale thinks they would do even better in benches. A good deal of bulbous stock is used. Mr. Hale showed us evergreens twenty feet high which he moved three years ago and not a single tree was lost. They showed a growth of twenty inches from the same year. He believes in moving evergreens in winter with a frozen ball. Ilex crenata is planted as a hedge in an irregular shape from the residence to the road and kept very low. This looks better for fancy hedge than anything we know of.

Our next visit was to James Loeb's and Jacob H. Shiff's place, and we met the superintendent, Mr. Kettel. This is quite a new place. There is a fine Italian garden and in one of the greenhouses are some Brides and Maids which are three years old on raised benches and better blooms were never grown around here. About 25,000 bulbs are forced here. A house 60x60 full of bedding stuff is used later for chrysanthemums.

Bordering on this place is the extensive estate of W. F. Havemeyer, Hugh McCarren, gardener. This also is a new place and beautifully laid out. There is not much glass here except for bedding stock and a palm house.

There are about forty-five private estates along the Rumson, adjoining each other, beautifully laid out and well taken care of, which make these surroundings one of the finest in New Jersey.

AMERICAN PEONY SOCIETY.

The attendance was disappointingly small at the meeting of the American Peony Society at New York June 8 and 9. Among those present were C. J. Malloy, of Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester; Wm. A. Peterson, of Chicago; E. A. Reeves, of Cleveland, and J. H. Humphreys, Philadelphia, but most of the rest of the attendance was local. C. W. Ward presided. The discussion had almost wholly to do with the disentanglement of peony nomenclature. The committee reported that it had compiled a descriptive list of some 1,100 distinct varieties and several promises of additional descriptions were made. It was proposed to plant a trial ground under the supervision of Prof. John Craig, at Cornell University.

There was some discussion on time of planting, blight, the use of lime and other questions. It was thought that holding the meeting in conjunction with that of the Nurserymen's Association would attract a larger attendance next year. The matter was left with the directors. C. W. Ward was re-elected president and all the other members of the board of officers were returned save that T. E. Smith, of Geneva, N. Y., succeeds C. S. Harrison as a director. Prof. Craig was appointed chairman of the nomenclature committee and J. H. Humphreys of the press committee.

The exhibition was not what had been anticipated, but Mr. Ward staged a splendid collection of 200 varieties and was awarded the $50 gold medal. C. Betscher, of Canal Dover, sent a large exhibit and Siebrecht & Son were well represented. Other exhibitors were the Andorra Nurseries, Frank Gould and Sunnyside Greenhouses. The exhibition was in conjunction with that of the Horticultural Society of New York, which included many seasonable things of interest.

NEBRASKA PEONIES.

We are in receipt of blooms of fifty varieties of seedling peonies from J. F. Rosenfield, the peony specialist, of West Point, Neb. The colors range from lightest pinks to the darkest reds, with some of exceptionally bright color in which the size and form of flower is excellent. A number of Mr. Rosenfield's seedlings have been under test for some time and will shortly be put on the market. The size of bloom, foliage and robust growth show that he certainly has good soil and is this season enjoying the same favorable conditions in which peonies are luxuriating in many sections this year, but with him the blooming season was fully two weeks late.

Vegetable Forcing.

MARKET gardening has reached the corporate stage at Chicago, the Craig Vegetable Co. having been incorporated by Asa H. Craig, M. A. Mergentheim and Wm. A. Chadwick.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Receipts for the week at New York pier, 3,892 crts. cabbages, 16,890 beans, 3,547 peas, 34,946 cucumbers, 22,235 tomatoes and 3,759 various. At Jersey City, 1,834 asparagus, 13,310 bskts. peas, and 345 various. By Old Dominion steamer, 23,354 cabbages, 21,898 beans, 3,405 peas, 2,093 New Orleans onions, and 856 various. By Savannah steamer, 4,672 pkgs. Asparagus was very scare at the close, and prices advanced sharply. Beets were easier and lower. Mushrooms were quiet. Fancy peas firm. Wax beans dull and weak. Tomatoes of fancy quality were firmer. Hothouse cucumbers are selling at 45@55c per dozen. Lettuce is plentiful and weak.

HOTBED AND HOUSE.

In trying to economize time and material, I have been endeavoring to construct a plan of a vegetable forcing house that I wish to use as a hot-bed for the first year and would like some information as to its advisability. I am able to get glass at a very reasonable rate, but have not the time nor the means to erect a completely equipped forcing house this year, but am in need of hotbeds for starting early vegetable plants for outdoor planting. As I expect to put up a vegetable house next year, would it be economy to use the glass in temporary sash for one season and then transfer it to the new house next year? Could I build a forcing house and use it as a regular hot-bed with horse manure for heating, and would such a plan be advisable?

W. K.

I must say that a combination hotbed and forcing house does not altogether strike my fancy and I would advise the subscriber to try and complete his house if possible. But, of course, one has to go according to his means. As the old saying goes, "No one knows where the shoe pinches, but the one who wears it." Of course the plan he suggests could be tried and might serve the purpose all right. If the soil were excavated deep enough to allow of three feet of manure, and if this were well packed, I should think it would retain enough heat to pull through early vegetable plants, providing it was not started before the beginning of March.

I do not think it would be economy to use the glass in temporary sash for the first season and then transfer it to the new house next year; I would rather be in favor of procuring the sash and keeping them as such; they are very convenient to have around, as they can be used for the raising and protection of numerous subjects and if the subscriber means to go into the raising of vegetable plants they would be almost a necessity for the hardening off of those plants, which hardening off is very essential before the plants are transferred to the open air.

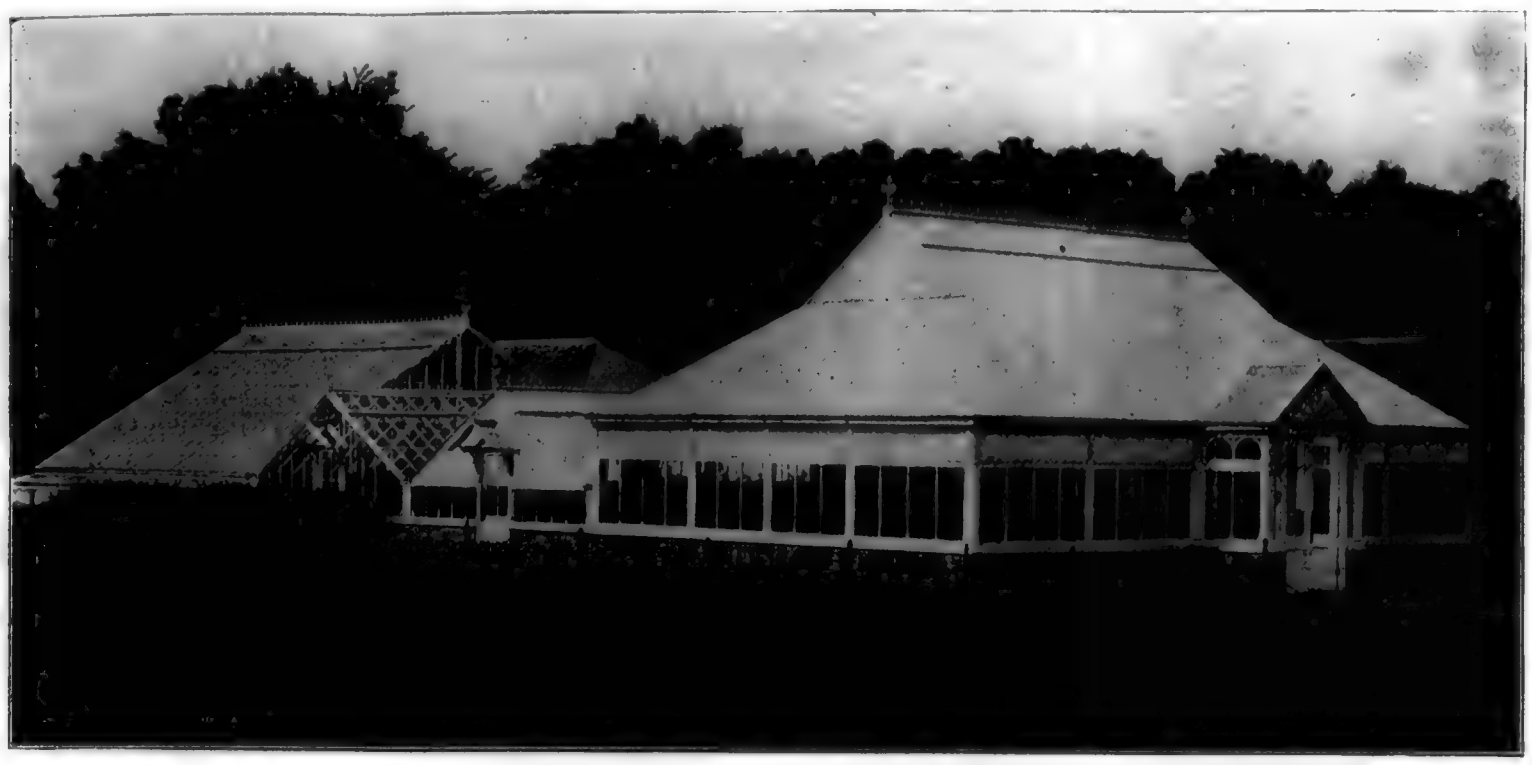
RECEIPTS FROM CUCUMBERS.

Based on Boston wholesale prices for cucumbers, about what should the gross receipts for a season or a year be for an even-span house 24x120 and twelve feet to ridge if properly handled?

W. B. S.

Such a house ought to produce in the neighborhood of 15,000 cucumbers in the season. Prices fluctuate so in Boston, as in other places, that it is hard to give an exact estimate, but a fair average, taking the season all through would be about 7 cents per fruit, which would give gross receipts of $1,050.

W. S. CROYDON.



NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market has settled early into its usual summer quiet. The excessive heat and enormous shipments of flowers last week to the wholesalers simply hastened the inevitable. From now until after the S. A. F. convention there can be but little improvement.

Peonies are everywhere, at the exhibitions, in the streets, on the counters and worse than all else, in the ice boxes unsold. Even at 50 cents a hundred on Saturday there was no demand. The stock was superb, but even a New York market cannot withstand the cyclone of oversupply. A good deal of the rose stock is inferior. Water lilies are arriving from Lecakes' Connecticut pond and are of fine quality.

The extreme high temperature of the early part of the week was succeeded by cool weather on Friday, which continued until Monday, when the heat of summer was again in evidence.

Club Meeting.

The New York Florists' Club held its final meeting for the season on Monday and a splendid attendance encouraged the officers in their efforts to make this the banner year of the organization. It was peony night and ladies' night also. Between 100 and 200 enjoyed the evening's festivities and it was close to midnight before Auld Lang Syne was was sung. John Birnie's "surprise" proved to be a Scotch piper and three handsome Scotch lassies in Highland costume, who danced charmingly. Everybody was delighted with the children and their work showed wonderful ability and training. Prof. Cameron is a master of bagpipes and played many times to the evident joy of every Scottish heart. A string band added to the harmony of the night. T. S. Black contributed Scotch songs, Samuel Burns, of Jersey City, told humorous stories, Alex Wallace sang Fair Glenlochy, J. A. Shaw gave a recitation and S. S. Butterfield sang sweetly his old song, "Sally in Our Alley." J. B. Nugent was the master of ceremonies. Ice cream, cake and strawberries were abundant and altogether the evening was one of the most enjoyable in the club's history.

Owing to the weather the peony exhibit was not an extensive one. George T. Schuneman, of Baldwins, L. I., showed vases of dark red, light and dark pink varieties and Chas. Lenker, of Freeport, his rose colored Fragrance and a collection of fifteen Japanese varieties, also his double pink and double white, Victoria. Mr. Stewart, of the committee on resolutions, reported as to the death of the mother of one of the club members, Peter Devoy, of Poughkeepsie. The transportation committee, through Mr. O'Mara, reported favorably in behalf of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad as the route to the convention. This will give opportunity to join the florists of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, assurances from these cities having already been received as to their co-operation. The train leaves New York at 10 a. m., reaches Philadelphia at 12, Baltimore at 2 p. m. and Washington at 4 p. m., arriving at Cincinnati early in the morning and affording a daylight entry to St. Louis. The cost of a fifteen-day ticket was announced as $23.25, the Pullman $6. Refreshments will not be wanting. The club unanimously endorsed the committee's decision. About fifty are expected from New York and vicinity. Henry Reimels, of Cedar Lane, L. I., was proposed for membership.

The proposition from the Siegel Cooper Co. to hold a flower show in November was commented on favorably, but the endorsement of the club was not given, although exhibits by individual members were encouraged. Mr. O'Mara, for the committee on awards, gave credit to the exhibitors and dwelt eloquently upon the future of the peony, declaring it to be "on the crest of the wave of popularity." The house committee received an appropriation of $50. The next meeting of the club was announced for the second Monday in September.

Two handsome specimens of the improved Piersoni fern were placed on exhibition and the committee in commending it announced a visit to be made shortly where it is growing, after which the club's recognition of its value will be made officially. The exhibits were generously distributed by Mr. Lenker and Mr. Schuneman to the ladies. The club's special nights are all provided for until 1905 and grow more enjoyable as the year progresses.

Various Notes.

Miss Marion, daughter of Chas. Henderson, of Peter Henderson & Co., was married on Tuesday evening last at her father's home in Hackensack, N. J. The force of Jno. Young, Jr., was two days completing the elaborate floral display for the occasion. The bridal bouquet was of white orchids and lily of the valley.

The sympathy of his friends is tendered Charles W. Siebrecht, of New Rochelle, in the loss of his only son.

Herman Keller, formerly with Dreyer, of Woodside, will build a range of glass on Jackson avenue this summer. His ability as a plantsman ensures him success and an abundance of New York customers.

Wm. Ghormley is welcomed back to Twenty-eighth street after a month's enforced vacation with his old enemy, rheumatism.

The exodus to the country and to Europe is on in earnest. John Theilmann, of Brooklyn, and L. W. Wheeler have taken time by the forelock and already had their share of ozone in the mountains in a two weeks' vacation. J. H. Troy and family start for Europe in a few days and the veteran youth, Samuel Henshaw, and his wife will cross the pond again and summer in England.

Mr. Guttman is booked for the whole of June in the jury box and says the experience to date has been more novel than disagreeable.

The souvenir program of the New York Florists' Club commemorating the coming outing was distributed on Saturday and demonstrates the liberality of the members. Prizes for over thirty athletic contests aggregating considerably over $200 have been provided. A large number of tickets have already been disposed of and everything points to June 29 as a gala day in the club's history.

Alex Smith, of Woodside, L. I., was married yesterday to one of Brooklyn's fair lady florists, thus following in the wise footsteps of his twin brother.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Kreshover sail on Thursday for Hamburg for a business and pleasure tour of Europe, returning on September 20.

Wm. Elliott & Sons will have a special palm sale at their auction rooms June 21. This will be the banner sale of the season. Since the marriage of W. J. Elliott on Saturday, June 4, his selling voice is particularly persuasive and mellow and good prices have prevailed. This was one of the June weddings you read about and another prophecy is fulfilled. There is still another floriculturist whose bachelor days are numbered.

The surplus of the Brooklyn Horticultural Society will be returned pro rata to subscribers.

Joseph Fleischman sued to recover commissions of $12,000 on the sale of the site of the Flatiron building to Samuel Newhouse in 1899, but the verdict was against him. It appeared that he had paid one visit to the owner of the property and one to Mr. Newhouse but had had nothing further to do with the deal.

Bowling.

Tuesday night at the new alleys a fair attendance of the faithful were on hand. The club will doubtless consist at St. Louis of those whose names were given in our last, with J. B. Nugent as spare man, and we look for an average of about 160 and first honors, if the nervine does not run short again. The score shows an average of 197 for Capt. Lang.

Flatbush Bowling Club is like the brook that flows on forever. Never a Thursday in the year is without a quorum and the games are always interesting, while the "pots" keep some of the boys in "pin money," especially Riley.

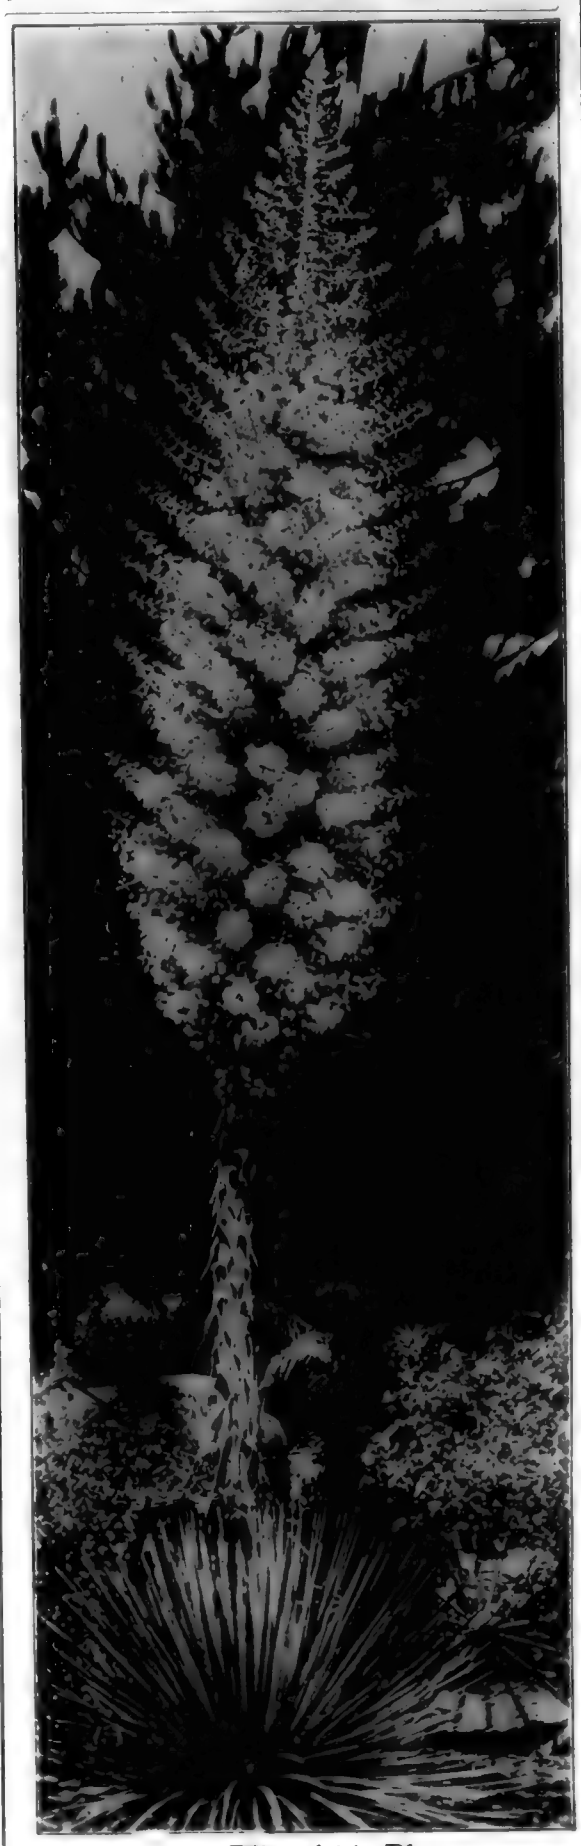
CHICAGO.

The Market.

Some of the wholesalers say that we did not paint conditions half bad enough in our report last week and certainly there has been little improvement since. There has come to be a fairly active canvass to secure good Beauties, but there are few buyers who are disappointed. Tea roses may be said to be a little better in quality than in the last two or three weeks; there are some reasonably good Brides and Maids among the large receipts of poor stock and Liberty is in fine form with many growers. There are also good cuts of Kaiserin and La France.

It seems that the carnation receipts have been at their heaviest during the past week and stock has accumulated on the wholesalers' hands to a most embarrassing extent, particularly whites. There are so many good looking carnations that it is difficult to find buyers for them all and the low grade stuff has little chance. Clean-up sales at very low prices are reported. Complaint is still made that, however good the carnations look, they will not travel.



There are wagon loads of peonies of all grades and colors and the out-of-town demand for these seems very light. The best stock is selling at $3 and $4 per 100 and indifferent grades and quantities are sold at very low prices indeed. The Easter lilies still obstruct the market and there are now quantities of gladioli which are little wanted. The receipts of valley continue large, but these are picked up for the spring wedding work. Candidum lilies are seen in most of the wholesale houses and are slow sale. There are quantities of sweet peas, but the quality is off. This is the last of the indoor crop and the outdoor stock will not be in for some time.

There are large receipts in all the odds and ends of spring stock and considerable of this material is going to waste. The new eastern ferns are now plentiful and prices down to $2 per 1000. Asparagus has become very scarce and hard to get in quantity, but there are ample supplies of smilax for the wedding work. Orchids are reported selling briskly at McKellar's.

This week shipping trade is fairly active and furnishes about all there is doing in the market, for the city trade is not heavy and the buyers find no occasion for going to a second house, as they get everything they want at the first stop.

The Fuchs Sale.

The Fuchs place was sold at private sale yesterday to J. S. Wilson, for many years manager of Vaughan's greenhouses, Yucca Whipplei in Bloom.

Western Springs, Ill., and George A. Kuhl, the well known plantsman, of Pekin, Ill. The sale includes the entire stock, greenhouses, retail store and good will, with a long-time lease on the real estate. The new proprietors are not yet ready to announce their plans, prior to the formal transfer, which is expected to take place today.

Various Notes.

At last week's club meeting the new constitution and by-laws were ordered printed and mailed to members. The meeting June 23 will be the last for the season and at this meeting a committee will be appointed to arrange for a summer outing.

It has been definitely decided that the flower show will open on the Tuesday following the presidential election.

W. N. Rudd has a large proportion of his carnations already benched. His Chicago Market white is about the only variety he is giving summer culture outdoors.

The E. G. Hill Co. has been sending good peonies to E. C. Amling, getting in just before the local cut.

J. E. Holden, at Forty-seventh street and Prairie avenue, has sold his place to Chas. E. Morton, whose place at 3626 Cottage Grove avenue will hereafter be conducted by H. S. Morton. The Holden stand is a very good one and a large business has been done there.

Bassett & Washburn report a very good sale on grafted Brides and Bridesmaid plants from the benches, which have been grown one or more years. They say that growers who have tried them find that they get better results earlier in the season than from the young grafted stock.

Last Sunday's Tribune devoted two pages to pictures and writeup of the McCormick decoration and stated that twenty car loads of shrubbery flowers and ten car loads of cut flowers were used. As a matter of fact the quantities were large. The Wittbolds did the work.

John Reardon, at Martin A. Ryerson's, is having very good success this year with his grapes. He is also growing a quantity of melons of the English varieties, Frogmore Selected and Royal Sovereign.

C. N. Thomas has returned from a two weeks' visit at his home in Pennsylvania.

Percy Jones is getting the first auratum lilies of the season.

Peter Reinberg is at Springfield this week attending the Democratic state convention. He has four of his new houses ready for planting.

Michael Rockland, of E. H. Hunt's is to be married June 21.

Wietor Bros. are getting a big cut of La France roses, many of them on three-foot stems.

Miss Nelda Wolf, of J. A. Budlong's, is absent from her post because of sickness.

E. E. Pieser says that he is looking for an early change in the market, as a few days of such weather as the last week will dispose of the peony crop and the carnation cut already appears to be shortening.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. has planted two acres of its aster, Benthey's Perfection, in white and pink, at their place at New Castle. This is growing for seed and a half-acre has been planted north of Chicago for cut flowers.

Visitors: Nathan Brown, of R. S. Brown & Son, Kansas City, Mo.; H. N. Burt, Battle Creek, Mich.; Wm. Dittman, New Castle, Ind.; Wencel L. Cukerski, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Market.

There is not much new to chronicle concerning the market since our last report. A week of dark, cloudy and cold weather restricted the output considerably but there was more than enough to go around and the fakirs carry full lines of many of the staples. Roses are deteriorating in quality and sell at low rates. Brides and Bridesmaids bring $2 to $6, some less. Beauties hold up fairly well at from $6 to $12. Many roses are now sold at a dime a dozen on the streets. Outdoor Jacq. roses have appeared and sell well. Carnations also show signs of approaching dissolution although some nice flowers still come in and bring $2 to $3. Inferior grades sell as low as $5 per 1,000 and some are hard to move at that price. Peonies have been very plentiful the past week. Single varieties, while very beautiful, do not take so well as the doubles. Prices have ranged all the way from $3 to $8, good pink and white colors selling well for wedding decorations. A large output of peonies is to be expected this week. Sweet peas remain plentiful and good outdoor stock is now coming in. Nymphæas are used freely for window decorations. Funerals, weddings and steamer orders have helped the market the past week.

Peony Exhibition.

Owing to the abnormally cool weather, temperatures falling as low as 36 and 38 degrees on June 10 and 11, the date for the annual peony show June 11 was a few days too early; nevertheless there was a fine show of these increasingly popular summer flowers. For eighteen double or single varieties A. H. Fewkes and Geo. Hollis were first and second. For singles T. C. Thurlow was in the lead. For the large china vases which hold over 100 blooms each, Wm. Thatcher and W. A. Riggs were first and second. In addition to the exhibits in competitive classes there were many large displays, chiefly of prominent commercial growers, including T. C. Thurlow, E. J. Shaylor, Geo. Hollis, Dr. R. T. Jackson and Walter Hunnewell.

Some of the most desirable doubles noted from a commercial standpoint were: Festiva maxima, still one of the best; Summer Day, Lady Alexander Duff, beautiful white; Golden Harvest, pretty yellow center petals; Jeanne d' Arc, Helena, Duchess de Nemours, Delicourt, grandiflora rosea, Belle Castellane, Mme. Costa, Mme. Rousseau, Mme. Ducal, delicatissima, Mme. de Verneville, Harwood and latipetela. A few of the more desirable singles were: Queen of May, Bridesmaid, Geraldine, Hesperus, Stanley and Adana.

Special awards were made to several of the best novelties. Numerous seedlings were shown, including a table of 100 from T. D. Hatfield. The same exhibitor had a large table of beautiful named rhododendrons and another of hardy perennials. W. Heustis staged 100 varieties of trees and shrubs, cut specimens, and W. H. Spooner a collection of Rosa rugosa. The Fewkes, Geo. Hollis securing the bronze Fewels, Geo. Hollis securing the bronze medal. The class for thirty varieties of peonies will be carried over to the annual rose show on June 21 and 22. The uncertain weather may cause a postponement of the annual rose and strawberry show. A fine exhibition is anticipated.

Various Notes.

The prizes offered by the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club, to be competed for when the Chrysanthemum and Rose societies meet here, will be for a vase of twenty-five mixed roses and twelve blooms of any chrysanthemum not in commerce. Prizes in each case will be $25, $15 and $10.

Elisha S. Converse, of Malden, who died in that city on June 5 at an advanced age, was a very liberal patron of horticulture as well as a philanthropist. Exhibits from Mr. Converse's gardens and greenhouses have for some years been a prominent feature at the exhibitions of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and we trust D. F. Roy, the able superintendent of the Converse estate, may in the future still grace the exhibition halls with his productions

The death of Lucius H. Foster, already recorded in the REVIEW, while not unexpected caused universal regret among the members of the craft. We trust his sport from the Boston fern, named Anna Foster, may for many years help to perpetuate the memory of a good, genial, warm hearted man.

A. Richwagen, of Needham, has for some years been a liberal contributor to our flower and plant markets. His recent death removes one more of our successful growers. Mr. Richwagen enjoyed the confidence of all his business associates.

There has been a remarkably fine show of hybrid aquilegias in bloom at Larz Anderson's estate, in Brookline, of late. Mr. Finlayson, the head gardener, makes them a feature in his fine Italian garden at this season and his display has not been equalled in this vicinity for a number of years.

The Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its second field day June 10, at the estate of Walter Hunnewell, Wellesley. A good number left Boston on the 1:15 train and more would have made the journey had the field day not come at such a busy season. The many interesting and attractive features on this fine estate were eagerly and closely scanned and many were the questions answered by T. D. Hatfield, Mr. Hunnewell's superintendent gardener. The marks of the late severe winter were evident in the appearance of many trees and shrubs, but a grand show of bloom was to be seen on azaleas, rhododrendrons and many other plants. One feature in a shady spot was a quantity of Primula Japonica, which proves quite hardy at Wellesley, with its pretty crimson spikes of flowers rising from a bed of Stellaria Holostea. The members thoroughly enjoyed their day. The next outing will probably take the form of carriage rides over the extensive Boston park system, which is now very attractive.

Florists and gardeners are suffering from a plague of cut worms, which are causing great damage. Carnations are being seriously injured by them. So far we are enjoying something of an immunity from tree pests, thanks to the cool, moist weather.

While a new wholesale market will probably be the outcome of the present agitation for such, there seems to be a lack of enthusiasm for the same. We think if the managers of the present market would meet the dissatisfied growers a compromise might still be reached.

Not for several years has there been so little greenhouse building as this season among commercial growers. Net returns from the past winter would not seem to justify further extensions.

Probabilities are that a good delegation from this section will take in the S. A. F. convention and World's Fair at St. Louis.

A party of peony specialists visited the nursery of E. J. Shaylor, of Wellesley Hills, on June 12 to inspect his extensive collection of peonies. In addition to the standard varieties Mr. Shaylor has forty-three of Lemoine's and other French raisers' novelties and many of Kelway's. A few of the best of the newer sorts noted were: Mme. Emile Lemoine, Marguerite Gerard, Marie Lemoine, very late; Sapho, Hambeau, Galatea and Mme. Vancel. Mr. Shaylor finds an increasing demand from florists for the better kinds and aims to have the best collection of peonies and gladioli in the country.

Frosts occurred in some parts of Massachusetts during the past week and tender plants and vegetables were much injured. Whole fields of potatoes were blackened in the southeastern part of the state.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

We are enjoying a lively week, full of bustle and activity, in marked contrast to last week's dullness. The street says it is the close of the season. Well, we will enjoy it while it lasts. The supply has fallen off. Many growers realize that their stock was exhausted and not worth sending in, while others are replanting at this, their usual time. The cool wave further shortened the cut. The demand, on the other hand, has increased, especially among the shops patronized by the "four hundred." The Whelan-Goelet, Fell-Henry and other large weddings of the week consumed much material. There were a lot of smaller affairs and a very decided shipping business from several outside cities. To meet this demand Beauties have been foremost. They are still of fair quality, and the price has stiffened wonderfully. The outdoor sweet peas led by Miss Blanche Ferry have come in force just in time. They are of superb quality, bright and fragrant, commanding ready sale. The down-trodden smilax grower is having his inning at last, cutting strings to his heart's content at prices scarce dreamed of since the advent of his wild brother. Valley sells well. Good carnations are fair stock but tea roses seem to be on the back track. Gladioli are here in quantity.

Peonies have reached a healthier state. The awful glut of last week has given way to a moderate supply, about equal to the demand. The beginning of next week will finish the local supply.

The Florists' Club.

Stern duty forbade a report of the meeting at Horticultural Hall last week. As it is better late than never, it was peony night and a great show was given. Frank Gould, gardener to John T. Morris, of Chestnut Hill, was the principal exhibitor, with a magnificent collection comprising many of the best sorts. Great interest was taken in the coming St. Louis convention. Committees were appointed on transportation and hotels.

Base Ball.

The great game of last Saturday, announced in the Review one week ago, was successful in every way. There was fine weather, keen rivalry and a good attendance, proving that florists have plenty of sporting blood. The Flower Market won by a score of 16 to 8, despite the presence of the genial Robert Craig, who cheered his nine. After the game the two teams enjoyed a refection at Ellinger's, nearby. Following are the teams:

Flower Market: Hartley, 2b; Schock, 3b; Jordan, p; Davis, ss; Fariano, c; Eble, lf; Palmer, rf; Upton, cf, Clarke, 1b.

Craig & Son: Kline, lf; Hansel, cf; Kennedy, ss; Swan, 2b; Brown, rf; Lord, 1b; Lawrence, p; Dieroff, c; Boyle, 3b.

Germantown Horticultural Society.

The June meeting of the society was held last Monday evening. President Neville in the chair. Secretary Redles read an interesting paper on the peony prepared by S. Mendelsson Meehan. Frank Gould also spoke on the same subject. There was an interesting exhibition and good attendance.

Various Notes.

Edward Reid is receiving Shakespeare gladioli in a variety of colors.

This week, June 15 to 18, marks Atlantic City's fiftieth anniversary. Many of the hotels are decorating for the occasion, drawing upon this city for quantities of roses, carnations and smilax. Eugene Bernheimer shipped some nice orders for this event.

The Wm. Graham Co. had the decorations for the Whelan-Goelet wedding on Tuesday. Beauties and smilax were largely used.

H. H. Battles decorated a large wedding recently with clusters of lilies of the valley woven in the bridal canopy and long-stemmed Beauties in the dining room.

M. Rice speaks in cheerful vein of his recent trip to Europe. Two humorous pen sketches adorn his office as souvenirs. One of a belated passenger rushing up the gang plank of a departing steamer just as it is drawn in, the other of the same passenger perched in the bowsprit of the returning steamer enjoying the funny things his friends on the wharf are saying.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are extending their office to give needed room for their clerical force.

C. F. Edgar & Co. are preparing to put a new flower holder on the market. The idea is a cornucopia-shaped paper with a wire catch at the top to be fastened after the bunch of flowers has been slipped inside. It will come in several sizes. Charles Krueger, at the Reading terminal, has it on trial.

Wm. J. Baker has experienced good demand for smilax and his "steady" carnations.

Samuel S. Pennock has had some large shipping orders for Beauties this week.

Girard College is the Mecca for florists now. They go to see the grounds and Edwin Lonsdale. Edward Swayne, of Wawaset, was there this week.

Johnson & Stokes have experienced a good demand for vegetable plants this week.

John A. Shellem states that he will retire from the business on July 1.

George Burton has been shipping a large quantity of fine Beauties to Leo Niessen from his father's Queen street place.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week the market was still active. Not alone were the boys busy with World's Fair decorations, but there were a great many June weddings, both large and small. School work also took up a great deal of our time, but not so much as in former years, when night work was necessary to get the orders out in time. There is a big supply of cut flowers at the wholesale houses and the bulk of them of good quality. In roses Brides are fine, Bridesmaids somewhat off color, Liberty fine in color but short in stem. Some good Golden Gates are also to be had. They sell as high as $6 to $8 for fancy and $4 to $5 for firsts. American Beauties are coming in fine and for long stock $2.50 to $3 per dozen is still the price.

Carnations are still up in price, with fancy stock not any too plentiful at $2.50 to $3, firsts $1.50 to $2. Some extra fine Wolcott, Hill and Lawson are to be had. Fine red and pink peonies from cold storage are plentiful at $4 per 100. Candidum lilies are plentiful at $10 per 100 stalks and are quite good sellers. Sweet peas are in great abundance. Light shades have the call; others are generally left over or sold cheap in job lots. The market is in good condition again as to greens.

Club Meeting.

The club's June meeting last Thursday was largely attended, with all the officers present except Vice-president William Winter. George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, and Paul Roper, of the Botanic Garden, were elected to membership. The president appointed W. J. Pilcher to act as sergeant-at-arms for the coming S. A. F. convention. It was decided that our annual picnic should not take place until after the convention this year. The discussions lead by Brothers Ammann and Schray, on "Replanting Rose Stock" and "Growing Hydrangeas," were very interesting. Those who took part in the discussion were Messrs. Giebel, Fillmore, Felter and Dunford. After this Mr. Ammann made some well directed remarks to the members to attend the meetings promptly, also their committee meetings, to work hard and make this the banner meeting of the S. A. F. O. H. In the question box a number of important queries were found which came up for debate. This has become one of the features of our meetings of late. A special meeting of the club will be held Thursday, June 23, at 2 o'clock. Otto Koenig, who is chairman of the finance and entertainment committee, invited the members to hold this meeting at his place, 7471 Florissant avenue, at which every member of the club is invited to be present and take part in the proceedings. The next regular meeting of the club will be held July 14 at our regular meeting hall in Odd Fellows' building. At this meeting James W. Dunford will lead a very important discussion, the subject being left for him to select. We all know Mr. Dunford's ability and know it will be interesting. The meeting then closed, after which the different S. A. F. convention committees held short meetings, making arrangements as to the work before them. They now meet each week and report fine progress.

Various Notes.

A. S. Halstedt, E. W. Guy and Henry Emmons, of Belleville, Ill., were visitors the past week, taking in the World's Fair. All of these gentlemen report their spring plant trade as never better. Cut flower work, too, has been good in every department.

Mr. and Mrs. Trelease have returned from a very pleasant trip to Madison, Wis., where they spent a week visiting friends.

There are 1,500 rose bushes in all varieties in full bloom in the rose gardens rear the Agriculture building at the fair. A fine lot of mountain laurel from Pennsylvania is now in full bloom. There is also a fine lot of rhododendrons from Eaglesmere lake, Pennsylvania. Miss Jennie Cassidy, the originator of the Flower Mission day in St. Louis, distributed 5,000 carnations and roses last week at the World's Fair from the headquarters of the W. C. T. U.

The city park employes held a big jubilee last Saturday night in one of the new greenhouses in Forest park. There was plenty to eat, drink and smoke. During the evening the boys presented Supt. Meyer with a gold shield emblematic of the office he holds.

The waterworks convention during the past week ended with a banquet at the New Jefferson hotel, at which the floral decorations were elaborate, consisting of carnations and American Beauties. These were furnished by J. J. Beneke.

The attendance at the World's Fair is increasing right along. Those who have the cut flower concessions report a big business.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE nurserymen's national convention convenes at Atlanta, Ga., next Wednesday.

C. W. GURNEY, of Yankton, S. D., has been in the nursery business in the northwest for thirty-two years.

OREGON is coming to the front in fruit growing. Nurserymen are doing large business there in fruit trees.

W. T. ASHFORD, of the Kennesaw Guano Co., Atlanta, Ga., is starting a nursery on his country place near there, for wholesale business only.

AS ornamental planting develops in the middle and western states, the call for flowering shrubs increases. And it will increase for years to come.

IT begins to look as though the craze for planting peaches might be on the wane. If the anticipated yield develops this season will see prices very low.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, which recently refitted its offices at 170 La Salle street, will have to vacate before May 1 next, as the building is to be replaced by a skyscraper for the Northern Trust Co.

EUGENE STARK, of Louisiana, Mo., created the sensation of the day at the meeting of the Missouri Horticultural Society at St. Louis last week, by charging the officers with lax methods of accounting.

CIVIC SOCIETIES UNITE.

The American Park and Outdoor Art Association, which, at its organization, was considered as aiming to represent the higher branches of horticulture, has so far departed from the original plan that at the convention held at St. Louis last week it was merged with the American League for Civic Improvement under the new name of the American Civic Association. J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa., was elected president and C. M. Robinson, of Rochester, secretary.

NEW PEONIES.

On the second day of the rhododendron show at Boston, June 5, Dr. R. T. Jackson showed four of his early blooming Richardson seedling peonies. These were as follows:

G. B. Sowerby, seedling of John Richardson; early, double, center petals creamy white, guard petals pink, very like officinalis alba and perhaps too close to that variety to merit special attention.

W. H. Dall, posthumous seedling of John Richardson; single, pure white, broad petals almost round, stigmas red; a good flower.

Emily Andrews Jackson, posthumous seedling of John Richardson; single, dark rose, flowers of good size and substance.

Esther Jackson, posthumous seedling of John Richardson; single, pure white, narrow petals; rather inferior.

There are many splendid sorts among the Richardson seedlings. Dr. Jackson, who grows them, will show the entire collection at Horticultural Hall this season and they are bound to excite great interest.

On June 11 the following new varieties of peonies received recognition at Horticultural Hall:

Ferdinand Stoliczka, Richardson seedling from Dr. Jackson; guard petals broad, light pink; center petals creamy white; a fine variety, awarded a certificate of merit.

Charles Sedgwick Minot; Richardson seedling from Dr. Jackson; guard petals pink, fringed; center petals bright pink, narrow; a very fine, full flower, with a fine odor; received a certificate of merit.

Lady Alexander Duff (E. J. Shaylor), a magnificent white, large broad petals in way of Festiva maxima; finely perfumed; received certificate of merit.

Seedling No. 1, (T. D. Hatfield) delicate flesh color, guard petals broad, very full, anemone-like center; certificate of merit.

Seedling No. 25, (T. D. Hatfield) guard petals white, delicately flushed with pink; center petals very closely packed and flaked red, like Festiva maxima; certificate of merit.

Seedling No. 623, (Geo. Hollis) broad guard petals, anemone-like center, deep purplish rose color; received honorable mention.

The Market.

While trade is not so lively that it is keeping any of us working overtime, still everyone seems to have pretty good business and it has a steadiness that looks good. The demand for stock of all kinds is good and, though prices are not especially high, the amount of stock that is being handled makes up for that a great deal. Weddings and commencements are the cause of what trade there is and prospects point toward a very good June business.

Roses have dropped to summer conditions with great rapidity this year, and those to be had at present look more like July roses than one usually sees in June. Beauties from the north are still pretty good, but Brides and Maids are pretty poor and many of them are suffering from mildew.

Carnations are coming in large numbers and many of them are fine. Others though show the effects of the hot weather and are almost unsalable when they arrive at the wholesale houses. W. J. Rodgers is cutting some very fine carnations for any time of the year. And those being received from the B. K. & B. Floral Co., of Richmond, Ind., are as fine as in mid-winter.

Daisies, stocks, sweet alyssum, cornflower and feverfew are all in good demand and there is enough to fill all orders. Sweet peas are selling very well but at a very low price. Lilies are also very good property. Peonies have been very good this year but those in this part of the country were unfortunate in not blooming for Decoration day. Nevertheless, they sold very well. The crop is just about over now, but cold storage ones are to be had and there is a good demand for them at 50 cents per dozen. "Green goods" are in fairly good supply and selling well.

Club Meeting.

Saturday evening the regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held. There was not a very large gathering of the members but those present were enthusiastic. Nominations for board of directors were in order and the following ten gentlemen were named from which number five will be elected at the next meting: Geo. Murphy, Chas. Murphy, R. Witterstaetter, Wm. Schumann, Ben. George, Jas. Allan, W. Rodgers, D. Rusconi, Aug. Hoffmeister and Gus Adrian.

It was decided to hold the election of officers on Thursday, June 23. A committee was also appointed consisting of Ben George, H. Schwarz and C. J. Ohmer to arrange for a banquet to be served on the same evening to the members of the society and their wives or lady friends are also especially requested to be present. This will be without cost to the members of the society. The meeting will be called to order at 8 p. m., and a good time is promised all those who will be fortunate enough to be present.

A committee consisting of Geo. Murphy, D. Rusconi, J. W. Rodgers, H. Konzelman, and W. Schumann was also appointed to make the necessary arrangements for the florists' annual outing, to be held some time in July. They were given full power to act.

Various Notes.

H. J. McLain is busy preparatory to opening a flower store at 413 Scott street, Covington, Ky.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE Wholesale Seedsmen's League holds its annual meeting at St. Louis June 24.

JOHS. TELKAMP, bulb grower, of Hillegom, Holland, is at New York to remain until September.

BURPEE & Co. mailed their annual wholesale price list on turnip, winter radish and spinach seed June 10.

BEAN planting is under way in the Michigan regions. Favorable weather is reported and the ground in good shape.

CUCUMBER seed for pickles is being hurried into the ground. Conditions are reported very favorable for a good start.

T. E. Buckbee, of Rockford, Ill., father of H. W. and John T. Buckbee and himself well known in the seed trade, died June 7, aged 70 years.

MAX WILHELMI, of Barteldes & Co., Lawrence, Kas., was a visitor at Chicago the past week. He spent two days looking over the onion set fields.

LOUISVILLE, KY., June 13.—The dry weather here is doing much injury to the growing crops. If rain does not come soon the damage to the onion set crop will be very serious.

BERG & SMALLEY are successors to E. Annabil & Co., seed growers and dealers, McPherson, Kas. Jas. Smalley was the junior partner of the old firm and active in it for years.

SEED for replanting squash, cucumber and pumpkin is being called for. The cut worm is working in several of the seed growing sections. Musk melon seems to be freer from the trouble than the other vine crops.

AT Chicago a brisk demand for stocky tomato plants was a feature of the week. Market garden trade for June so far has been remarkably large. Home grown produce is cutting something of a figure now and the market gardener can afford to purchase needed supplies.

THE Gardeners' Chronicle (English) gives a lengthy obituary of Thomas Smith, the head of the Scottish seed house of T. Smith & Sons, who died May 18, aged 84 years. Archibald Smith, another son, has for eighteen years been connected with Joseph Breck & Sons, Boston.

VISITED CHICAGO.—A. Kirsche, of Apolda, Germany, grower of oats and beets, who has an exhibit at the St. Louis exposition; Mr. Walter, of Stumpp & Walter Co., New York, on his way east with his family from the St. Louis fair; E. F. Crossland, of Steele Briggs Co., Toronto.

A NEW GARDEN BEAN.

Van Namen Bros., the well-known Holland seedsmen, will shortly distribute in this country, through C. H. Joosten, a new white-flowering garden bean of which they say in a Dutch circular: "They are very suitable for preserving and retain their natural white color after being cooked, also in tins, which cannot be said of any other garden bean variety and it cannot be too highly recommended to canners. When in bloom it is distinct from any other bean; they do not show any black spots and the plant bears pure white flowers."

SEED TRADE CONVENTION.

The American Seed Trade Association will come to order at the Forest Park University Hotel, St. Louis, at 10 a. m. next Tuesday, June 21, for its twenty-second annual convention. The program is one of the most interesting ever prepared for the association and the proximity of the World's Fair, with much of interest to the trade, will aid in making this the most successful of the association's regularly successful gatherings.

SEASON AT BOSTON.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. report that the seed season now closing opened later than last year, much of the usual March business having been put off to April. The pressure in April was very great and the season was prolonged to almost the end of May. Fewer extra early peas than usual were sold, owing to the lateness of the season and lack of opportunity to plant them. When the season opened Gradus and other wrinkled peas were planted. Sweet corn, cucumbers and wax beans have been scarce, owing to unfavorable harvesting weather. Other vegetable seeds have sold well and surpluses are small. The trade in flower seeds, bulbs and plants has been quite up to the average, but shrubs and trees have sold less freely than last year, the planting season for the latter being practically crowded into two weeks. Although short the season has been a busy one and the volume of business quite up to the average.

HIGH PRICES NO BAR.

The one lesson to be learned from this season's business is that high prices do not reduce trade. While, of course, from the difference in the weather, we did not have quite as large a trade during the month of March as last year, yet our total business up to the last day of March was a little ahead of a year ago while the gains in April and May have been phenomenal, making in all the largest year's trade that we have ever handled.

W. ATLEE BURPEE.

BULB PRICES.

The French syndicate of bulb growers is endeavoring to profit by last year's experience and has issued a price list on French Romans which is an advance of about $1 per 1,000 on the last year's market. Latest cable advices are to the effect that French Romans are quoted as follows: 11-12 centimeters, 65 francs; 11-15, 75 francs; 12-15, 82½ to 85 francs; 13-15, 95 to 100 francs. These prices are f. o. b. Ollioules. One of the largest growers reports that his crop will be about two-thirds that of last year and thinks this is a fair average for the district.

Prices on Paper Whites are quoted at 18 francs for the 12 centimeters and up. On 13 centimeters and up the quotation is 25 francs.

Recent advices from Japan are to the effect that Lilium longiflorum multiflorum in the large sizes will be very scarce, not more than ten per cent as many 9-10s being harvested as 7-9s. Of giganteums twenty per cent as many 9-10s as 7-9s are expected.

The harvesting in Bermuda will be underway in a few days. A scarcity of large sizes of Harrisii is predicted there.

THE ODORIFEROUS CAPE.

In speaking of the wonderful things he saw in the establishment of a florist who gave him a bunch of flowers, an Illinois editor said: "Fifteen hundred cafe jessamine bloom were received from the South Texas coast for Decoration day. When all unpacked these filled thirty large vessels and the odor permeated the entire house. These flowers are grown in shallow water on the sea coast and are becoming more and more popular each year for Decoration day flowers. The petals are waxy white and the foliage a very dark, brilliant green."

CONVERSE GREENHOUSES, Webster, Mass.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—John Fay Kennell is now to be addressed care rural free delivery from Chili Center, N. Y.

NEOSHO, MO.—J. S. Angel is putting up two greenhouses, one for lettuce and pieplant, the other for carnations. Trade has been very good this season.

LEXINGTON, KY.—Honaker has begun the erection of two large rose houses, 28x180 feet. He is also building an asparagus house 20x75, fifteen feet to the ridge.

PORT ALLEGANY, PA.—J. C. Galloway is retiring from the management of the Port Allegany Greenhouses to go into business as the Eden Nurseries. He is building two houses 25x100 for wholesale trade.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Decoration day was very busy with all the florists here and most of them say it was the heaviest in the history of the trade. Much trade came to the florists on account of the shortage in outdoor flowers. There were very few peonies and most of those were the small early red. Field daisies were not in by at least ten days. Decoration day coming on Monday, many people took flowers to the cemeteries on Sunday, thus giving the florists three days to supply the demand. Fortunately there were large quantities of carnations and sweet peas, and what bouquets were not made of carnations and sweet peas and feverfew were made of feverfew, sweet peas and carnations.

The spring bedding season was also one of the best on record. Prices were higher and everybody sold out early. Late orders had a hard time finding good stock.

This second week in June the town is flooded with peonies and they can be bought for a song or less. Carnations are shortening up considerably, while roses are coming small and mildewed.

At the meeting of the State Florists' Association John Hartje read a very intereting paper on hybrid roses. One new member was elected, Leo Rickenbach. A committee was appointed to arrange for a picnic next month, date to be announced later. A. B.

MADISON, N. J.

A press telegram reports that the leading industry of this place, rose growing, is threatened with destruction by the advent of an insect which, it is said, ruins the buds. The bug was first noticed about three weeks ago. It attacks the petals of the roses, which soon shrivel and become unfit for market. So far, no means have been found to exterminate the pest, though many experiments are being tried. L. M. Noe, the largest grower in the neighborhood, has discovered that the daisies and clover blossoms in the field adjoining his rosehouses are alive with the insects, and he believes that they reach the houses through the ventilators. The insects are small, and when disturbed jump like a flea. There are sixty-three growers in Madison employing more than 400 men.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.—Peter Loretto, of Buffalo, has opened a flower store at 8 W. Falls street.

PACIFIC COAST.

PASADENA, CAL.—W. J. Hesser, formerly of Platsmouth, Neb., is now in charge of a private establishment here.

THREE THOUSAND dollars has been appropriated to the University of California, Department of Agriculture, by the Southern California Walnut Growers' Association. This sum is to be expended in studying the walnut blight, a disease which threatens serious damage to the walnut industry of California. The work will be under the direction of Plant Pathologist Ralph E. Smith, who has had charge of the asparagus rust investigations by the University of California. The work to be done by Prof. Smith will mean considerable addition to the provision for laboratory work at Berkeley. It is possible also that a temporary depot will be established in southern California for the study of the disease in its immediate vicinity.

ANNUALS.

Annuals had a very fair sale this spring. Pansies are the best selling spring plants we handle. They retail here at 50 cents per dozen and the season for planting them begins early in March and extends through April and the first part of May. The Bugnot and Cassier strains are grown in California in large quantities and are the best sellers. Several years ago we grew great quantities of the Trimardeau sorts but the public has been educated up to asking for the rich bronze and golden shades and, although the flowers are not quite as large or the plants as thrifty growers, they sell much better. We plant the seeds about the end of July and transplant into the open field in October. In this way there is no difficulty to get plenty of big showy flowers as soon as the frosty weather is gone. Pansies thrive best in heavy soil well worked up with rotted manure and thoroughly drained. If they do not receive a check in handling they are one of the easiest as well as one of the most profitable articles that can be grown.

Asters sold well this spring and we are confining ourselves almost entirely to Semple's branching varieties. They succeed well here and have entirely taken the place of the older sorts. In some localities last season the aster borer did considerable damage but it has not made its appearance in this neighborhood this season as far as I am aware. The smaller dealers grew large quantities for the retail trade. We handle them entirely in flats transplanted about 100 to a box.

Golden coreopsis is another article that is in good demand and sells at about 50 cents per dozen plants. Stocks are grown in the same way and have a steady demand. Bachelor's buttons, marigolds and cosmos are handled in enormous quantities around our larger cities and sell at about the same price as the others I have mentioned.

In bedding plants I do not think the demand was as good as we have had in former seasons. There are really only a few large private places in this locality that use such material in large quantities and outside of the public parks it is seldom seen. The taste of Californians does not seem to be in the line of carpet bedding and although at one time we had a good demand for achyranthes, feverfew, lobelias, salvias, coleus and other stock of that nature, we have outgrown that idea and roses and palms take their places. Californians are too fond of planting trees and shrubs that will thrive a lifetime to go to the trouble of planting soft-wooded stuff every spring. Flowers grow so easily here that we consider many things too common to give garden room to and scarlet geraniums, callas and marguerites have many years since been relegated to the back yard, along with the chickens and the dog house. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had a fair supply of June weddings, and, although there is nothing to brag of in a business way, there is much less in the line of flowers. I have not seen a dozen good Beauties for the past two weeks and the less said of other varieties of roses the better. Carnations are short in stem and poor in flower. We have had considerable hot weather and its effect has been shown in the quality of flowers. Sweet peas are plentiful and good and are about the best selling item the retailers have at present. Other outdoor flowers are plentiful and help very much to make window displays. June trade is ahead of last season at the same period according to what the majority of the retailers say. This is encouraging as June is usually one of our most quiet months. Valley is plentiful and Harrisii and longiflorums are being offered in fair quantities.

Notes.

The demurrer to the complaint in the suit brought by Frank Shibeley against the Board of Public Works of San Francisco to prevent the issuance of flower permits to street venders was admitted to be good by the attorneys in Judge Sloss' court this week and they were allowed three additional days to file an additional complaint. The argument on the question of whether an injunction should be issued was set for next Friday. The application for an injunction is opposed by the attorneys for the Merchants' Association, this body desiring that the flower market ordinance be put in force and the venders allowed to sell flowers at the places designated in the ordinance. FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

SHORTIA GALACIFOLIA is fully justifying the high estimate that was formed of it when first introduced to cultivation a few years since. G. Reuthe, Keston, who contributed a score or so of splendidly-flowered plants to the Drill Hall meeting, states that it is of the easiest culture, both in pots and on the rockery, and regards it as one of the most valuable of the rock plants that have been introduced to the garden in recent times.

WHETHER THE VARIETIES of chrysanthemums introduced in the near future will be an improvement upon the present standard rests entirely in the hands of those who are charged with the adjudication of new varieties. Were greater stringency imposed, even, than now is the case, in granting certificates, an improved type of flower would be the result. Raisers of new varieties, who are seldom the cultivators, need have no uneasiness about the disposal of sterling varieties, because an exhibitor knows quite well in these days of keen competition the value of a flower that is really an advance upon older varieties of a similar type.

THE IMPORTATION of cut flowers into the British Isles continues to show a decrease, probably due more to the large quantities which British growers are putting on the market than to any decrease in the practice of using flowers for decorations, etc. The value of flowers imported during March were as follows: In 1904, £47,260; in 1903, £56,580; in 1902, £62,454.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.—J. C. Thompson is starting a plant here with about 8,000 feet of glass. He expects to have about 75,000 gladioli to dispose of this fall, also dahlias and caladiums.

BUFFALO.

Various Notes.

While we hear reports of intense heat from many cities east and west, we locals have been enjoying the most perfect weather, just warm enough so that the open cars are a delight and sleeping alone is preferred to two in a bed. The soft breeze that quietly skims over the 300 miles of Lake Erie and cools and tempers our city nowadays makes us forget the zero zephyrs of last March and there are now days and days that convince you that after all, prince, pauper, florist or preacher, it is really good to exist.

Plantsmen all report a good season and still busy. The season of planting began late and many big jobs will be filled at the middle of June. This must seem strange to those who keep house in localities that fear no frost after May 1. I don't know of any novelty in the flower gardening line except that there is rather a better taste shown in garden decoration. Hardy perennials, grasses, flowering shrubs and tropical plants have been more the feature. H. Keitsch & Son have been displaying a grand lot of peonies of late. They are blest with the richest of soil and Charlie attends to things.

We were to have had a meeting of the committee appointed to draw up a premium list for the H. A. Meldrum show, but a majority was not present. Yet I am privileged to say that the H. A. Meldrum Co. will give the usual $1,000 and the Sweeney Co. want us to arrange a spring show with a $5,000 attachment. Charlie Keitsch can manage both these affairs and lots more.

OMAHA.

The following extract is from the Bee, of June 5:

A. Donaghue, Sr., the pioneer florist of Omaha, now located at No. 5425 North Twenty-fourth street, engaged in the gardening business in Omaha in 1866. This he continued up to 1870, when he established his floral business and greenhouses at the corner of Sixteenth and Douglas streets, where the Boston store now stands. "I sold this property in 1890," he said, "and removed to my present location. There were one or two other florists here when I first went in the business, but they have long since been gathered to their fathers. My business has kept pace with the city's growth, and I still adhere as I did thirty-four years and more ago, to the belief that Omaha is to be one of the greatest cities of the west."

SWARTHMORE, PA.—John Wild, formerly at the Swarthmore Greenhouses, is now located at Grand Haven, Mich.

MANHEIM, PA.—Hostetter Bros. lost 16,000 panes of glass in the big hail storm which passed over this place June 3.

PLEASE discontinue my smilax adv.; plants all sold and orders still rolling in, some even from Canada. Talk about Record "want" advs., they are not in it with the REVIEW.—J. E. YEATS, Champaign, Ill.

WELLFLEET, MASS.—C. P. Marsh started in the plant business two years ago, with some sashes and a hotbed. He has found the trade profitable right along and steadily increasing, so last winter he built a greenhouse.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

There has been an improvement in business during the week, stock of all kinds having cleared out better than has been the case for some time. Quite a number of June weddings and commencements have taken place and this work has been evenly distributed over the city. Geo. Shaffer had one wedding in North Carolina. These affairs have used up quite large quantities of flowers. Good stuff at times seems to be a little scarce. Good roses have been in demand. There is plenty of second class stock around which can be worked in fairly well. Prices have been somewhat firmer but remain rather low. Sweet peas have been in large demand, white and pinks being mostly called for, the highest price about 50 cents per hundred. Valley has also sold very well at from $2 to $3 per hundred. Peonies are now very abundant and it is hard work to average 50 cents per dozen for them. They are handled on the streets by the fakirs. Good carnations find ready sale at fair prices.

Various Notes.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at an elaborate luncheon Friday afternoon for the members of the Filipino commission. The rooms of the lower part of the White House were decorated handsomely with plants and cut flowers, the work, under the direction of Geo. H. Brown, being done by the employes of the United States Propagating Gardens.

Planting in the public parks is progressing as rapidly as the weather will permit and but few of the beds remain yet to be planted. More cannas are being put out than before, quite a number of new varieties having been added to the list this year.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting last Friday evening, President Gude presiding, and a large number of the craft were present. Considerable interest was manifested in the possibility of Washington securing the home and headquarters of the Society of American Florists. The florists of Washington, headed by Wm. F. Gude, are making an effort to enlist the interest of the business men of the city, which will include conferences with the Business Men's Association and the Washington Board of Trade.

TO-BAK-INE
FUMIGATING POWDER
Kills all kinds of Aphides.

50 lbs., $1.50; 100 lbs , $3.00

Send postal for a free copy of "WORDS OF WISDOM" by leading growers; also for a free 5 lb. bag of TO-BAK-INE POWDER, sufficient for two thorough fumigations in a house 100 x 24 ft. This 5 lb. bag will be sent for the express charges only.

DIRECTIONS FOR A HOUSE 100 X 24 FEET.

Use 4 to 5 pounds of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER, equally divided into 4 or 5 portions, and placed on fine wire cloth or tin pie plates. Pour a little kerosene around on thin edge of piles and then light; it will burn slowly without blazing. Note the fumes of nicotine. Best to fumigate in moist atmosphere. Note—An ordinary 6-inch pot will hold, heaping full, about a pound of TO-BAK-INE POWDER.

TO-BAK-INE
FUMIGATING POWDER

50 lbs., $1.50; 100 lbs, $3.00

Send postal for a free copy of "WORDS OF WISDOM" by leading growers; also for a free 5 lb. bag of TO-BAK-INE POWDER, sufficient for two thorough fumigations in a house 100 x 24 ft. This 5 lb. bag will be sent for the express charges only.

DIRECTIONS FOR A HOUSE 100 X 24 FEET.

Use 4 to 5 pounds of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER, equally divided into 4 or 5 portions, and placed on fine wire cloth or tin pie plates. Pour a little kerosene around on thin edge of piles and then light; it will burn slowly without blazing. Note the fumes of nicotine. Best to fumigate in moist atmosphere. Note—An ordinary 6-inch pot will hold, heaping full, about a pound of TO-BAK-INE POWDER.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

Throughout North Holland co-operative associations of market gardeners are conducted on practical lines. The products of the members, before being offered for sale, are inspected by officers of the respective associations, and any that are below the standard are rejected, the others having the registered trade-mark affixed. This trade-mark is regarded by buyers as evidence that the produce is of good quality, and has been properly packed. The products thus passed are offered for sale at the society's mart, the president of the local branch usually acting as auctioneer. Commission agents and dealers from the various cities attend the sales and the goods sold are paid for in cash. At the end of the week each member is paid the sum his products have realized, less the commission, which is small. This system has given a great impetus to market gardening in Holland, and as evidence of this it may be mentioned that during the summer months a "cabbage train" starts daily from Enkhuizen, on the shores of the Zuider Zee, and picks up at the principal stations some thirty or forty trucks loaded with cabbages and cauliflowers. Arriving at Amsterdam and Rotterdam, the trucks are mostly despatched to Germany, whence also wagon-loads of cucumbers are sent at frequent intervals during the season. Large quantities of vegetables are also sent to the British markets.

NO SCIENCE BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE.

It don't tell you the botanical classification but it does tell you how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

It don't list every plant in cultivation but it does tell you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

The articles are arranged alphabetically so that when you want to see what Mr. Scott says about Cannas you turn to the Cs and in an instant you have it.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The book treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

It is a book that you need in your business just as you need any other useful labor and money saving implement or device.

The price is $5.00, carriage prepaid.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.....Caxton Building.....CHICAGO.

KANSAS CITY.

Florists in Kansas City have had a good spring business. Greenhouse men have had the best planting and bedding trade they ever enjoyed, even if we have had lots of rain, which has kept them back somewhat. But they are about caught up and everyone is happy. They are all very nearly sold out of bedding stock.

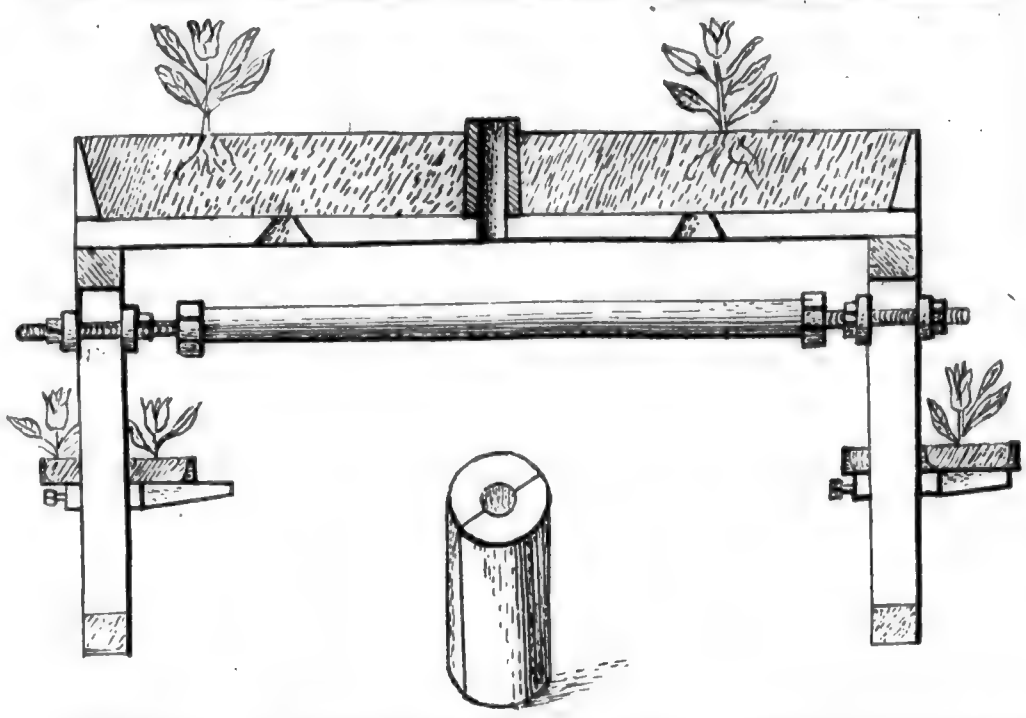
A. F. Barbe is building six more greenhouses, adding 10,000 feet of glass to his place, which will give him the largest plant in town. He will devote it all to cut flowers. He is also putting up a first-class two-story office and show room which is to be the best in town.

The cut flower market is very unsatisfactory. At present the weather is against getting good stock two days in succession. Roses all come in open, especially American Beauties. Carnations are small.

There is talk that there will not be a flower show this fall in Convention Hall, if there is any at all.

All the downtown florists are talking about vacation, some to go to the woods and others talk about convention and the World's Fair.

L. M. S.



INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—H. H. Tall has been appointed florist at Garfield park, vice Henry Stanley.

WEST POINT, NEB.—On June 7 J. F. Rosenfield's peonies were just beginning to bloom, fully two weeks later than usual. He has some very choice new sorts and had intended to send some blooms to the Peony Society's show in New York, but the show developed before the blooms did.

CLINTON, MO.—A. Woerner says this has been a very successful season for him even if the weather has been very bad. He will build a house 20x65 this season, of the best material and top and side ventilation. Mr. Woerner says he has been in the trade forty years and expects to stay in it another forty.

WE are in receipt of the Proceedings of the Thirteenth Annual Meeting of the American Carnation Society held in Detroit, March 2 and 3. Besides the part covered by the REVIEW's report March 3, the volume contains proceedings of directors' meetings, a list of the varieties registered for the year and the roster of the members, who number 340.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Spread Out the Palms.

There will be less stock in our houses for the next two months than at any time of the year, except it be with the palm specialists, who are now pushing along their young stock that will be sent out in the fall. If you grow a few young palms don't over-force them. It is true that our leading commercial palms, the kentia, areca, latania and phœnix, will endure a great amount of heat and humidity, and some large growers give it to them, but others do not. It is those who give all the ventilation they can, with the least shade that is permissible, and plenty of room for the plants to develop their growth, who send out the fine stock, well formed, desirable palms. I once entered a house of arecas in June; the sun was shining and it was about 70 degrees outside in the shade, and yet there was steam on in that house. The temperature must have been about 117. Of course the Areca lutescens were growing fast, but when sold to the man who could, in the fall, only give it 60 degrees at night they would soon assume that beautiful (?) pale yellow color. Give your young palms plenty of room now that you can afford it.

Some Plants Can Go Outside.

Decorations of all kinds are about over and large plants of kentia, latania and phœnix are just as well out of doors for the next three months. It is of the greatest benefit to sink the pots or tubs in the ground, or surround them with some light material, for then there is less danger of their suffering from neglect of watering.

Areca lutescens is the most decorative of all palms and yet is not as valuable to us as the kentias because it is not as good a house plant, nor will it stand the "rough and tumble" usage we give our plants that are carted around the city to participate in many varied functions. This beautiful palm is best kept under glass, for, with the greatest care, it soon loses its color in the sun.

Araucaria excelsa should be given plenty of bench room in a well ventilated house, beneath shaded glass, and they greatly enjoy a spraying with the hose on every bright, warm day.

Plan to Keep Smilax Warm.

As soon as all your chrysanthemums are planted you will be attending to your smilax and asparagus beds. Anyone can grow smilax, but not all profitably. On the ground is the place for it and there is no need of a dry bottom or drainage of any kind. Six inches of soil is enough, because it is to be there only one year. As good a smilax bed as the writer ever saw was in a house where the lower roots must have been constantly wet, in fact almost in water. Don't plant smilax in a house where the temperature cannot be kept steadily at 60 and if 65 degrees so much the better. It likes heat, and needs it to be profitable, and is none the more tender or soft because it is grown in a strong heat.

Deep Soil for Plumosus.

There never seems an oversupply of Asparagus plumosus or Sprengeri. Particularly is plumosus wanted in the shape of sprays and for that purpose it can be planted on a bench in six inches of the richest soil, but it will not do as well as it would in a solid bed. For the production of long strings of plumosus never plant it anywhere but in a solid bed with no tiles, stones or drainage of any kind, as it would be a detriment. Put your rich, heavy loam, with a third of animal manure, on the surface of the soil, and if that was dug and manured a foot deep, so much the better. You don't plant Asparagus plumosus every year. It will be profitable if left undisturbed for three or four years. I will quote the words of W. H. Elliott, the asparagus king, who gave the writer the best of advice when he said, "Never divorce plumosus from mother earth," and we found what he said was true, for in nine inches of rich soil, but with a plank separating the bed from mother earth, the ends of the growths became bleached-looking after the bed had been planted a few months.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

Adiantum cuneatum and similar species are doubtless very beautiful and indispensable. Yet we think that in a spray of roses or carnations, so much asked for nowadays, Asparagus plumosus is far prettier and has a grace of form and color that the adiantum lacks. A. Sprengeri is not so high class, yet it is always in demand and we find constant use for more than we produce. It is useless to put this most voracious of feeders on a bench in five or six inches of soil. It will produce a few fronds at first and the aftermath will be a slow, stunted, starved growth.

Mr. Crowe's Method.

I have several times quoted the method used by Peter Crowe, of Utica, N. Y., in growing this useful plant. He used Belgian glass boxes that had held 100 feet of 16x24 glass. They are eight or nine inches broad and when stood on edge and filled with the richest of soil the roots would have to go down sixteen inches before they were exhausted. In addition to great depth of soil they were most liberally treated to liquid manure. I have never seen such luxurious and continuous growth, or better color. The boxes were standing on the ground beneath the gutters in a large rose range that had no partitions. You may not have such a place, nor is it necessary to import Belgian glass to obtain these boxes, but the above will illustrate what this useful plant needs to make it profitable. It is a hog for feed and if you stint its food, either solid or liquid, it will be a lean, stunted thing.

Poinsettias.

This is an excellent time to keep on putting in cuttings of poinsettia and you can do so till the end of August. They root quickly and surely in the hot months, providing you keep them soaked and shaded. When you pot them keep them well shaded and frequently sprayed till they get hold of the soil. After that they want the broadest and purest sunshine that warms this little sphere. A new theory is that it is not the sun that warms our earth, but radium; don't believe it!

Tree Peony Queen Elizabeth.

Adiantum Croweanum.

Very shortly that most excellent of adiantums, Croweanum, will be sent out. The writer has seen it growing at Mr. Crowe's place at Utica many times within the past seven or eight years and there it is truly wonderful. There is a gentleman in Washington, D. C., who thinks he has the same thing and had it first. He is mistaken, as we have a few plants of Croweanum and his fern side by side and they are entirely distinct. Unlike A. cuneatum and A. concinnum, whose spores germinate so freely, this fern has no fertile spores and propagation must be entirely by division. Now I wish to say that the little that follows about the culture of this splendid fern is not at the request or even permission of Mr. Crowe or Mr. Kasting, who is sending it out, yet I can scarcely think that either of these young men will object to any hint that will help toward your success in growing it.

How Mr. Crowe Does It.

If you have grown A. cuneatum really well, then you will grow Croweanum, and it is immensely superior in all desirable qualities. If you have made a poor attempt at growing cuneatum you will also fail with Croweanum and many a florist will buy it, starve it and then declaim that he "don't see nothin' in it." Here is what can be observed at Mr. Crowe's. The fern is grown on raised wooden benches in five or six inches of soil. In some of the houses there are two 1-inch steam pipes beneath the benches, but near the ground, and in some houses no pipes beneath the benches. Mr. Crowe thinks it is of no consequence whether the pipes are there or not, but by no means would he have many pipes, or any of them near the boards. The soil is just what he uses for his rose beds, a rotten sod from a rather heavy, yellow loam, with a fourth of animal manure. The night temperature is kept at about 60 degrees. The plants and the surface of the beds are dusted with air-slaked lime. So heavily is this put on that the crowns of the plants are white with it. This was first applied to keep the slugs away but now it is thought to be a fertilizer of considerable value.

All of the above is very simple and easy to copy, but now comes the all-important item, the one that has made Croweanum famous and produced those wonderful fronds. The benches are never watered with pure cold water, never; when they need water they get a soaking of warm liquid manure. By warm, I mean about 65 degrees. The ingredients of this liquid manure I can't tell you, for I never tasted it, but I have seen the immense tank in which it is brewed, then pumped up to a wooden tank and by gravity goes to any part of the houses. It is this warm liquid that makes these splendid fronds and without it I don't believe you can ever produce such wonderful results as can be seen in Utica. Use plenty of liquid manure, but no old Crow whiskey. William Scott.

CARNATIONS

GREEN APHIS.

I should like to know the best way to get rid of green aphis on pansies and carnations in the field; they are unusually bad this year. E. T.

You can use much the same methods to destroy the green aphis on your carnation and pansy plants in the field as you would use for them inside. Of course, you cannot fumigate outside, but you can dust the plants with tobacco or spray them with tobacco liquid. Put it on in the evening or early in the morning, especially the liquid, as it will burn the foliage if applied a little too strong when the sun is quite hot.

During the past few weeks we have had on trial some of the To-bak-ine products which are advertised in the Review, and I must say that they are the best things I have ever come across for aphis, thrips, spider and all such greenhouse pests. One form is ground about as fine as your wife grinds coffee and has a certain amount of nicotine added to make it of uniform strength. This is to be burned and for general fumigating this is very efficient and handy, as it burns slowly and will keep your house filled with the fumes most of the night, yet never dense enough with smoke to burn the most tender plants. Another form looks like blotting paper saturated with a solution of nicotine made of a certain strength. This is as effective as the other, but is preferable to it in some cases. It does not leave the least odor on the blooms and while a house is in full crop we would much prefer it to the other. Many growers who are obliged to cut blooms every day find it difficult to fumigate as often as desirable and always have their blooms free from the disagreeable burnt tobacco odor, but with this To-bak-ine paper you can fumigate in the evening and cut your blooms the next morning without any foreign odor. The third form is a liquid which is the best thing we have ever run across to fight thrips and red spider. When diluted to the proper proportions with water it is so nearly clear that it does not spot the half-open blooms nor burn them, although it is as strong as you dare use tobacco water. We find that two teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water will destroy every green or black aphis with one application. Thrips, of course, take several doses as you cannot reach them all with one or two applications. Of this last you should always have a case on hand as you sometimes need it quick.

I would recommend this to E. T. for his carnations in the field. It may take more than one application out of doors, as the odor will be carried away more, but it will do the work for him. For several years I have been looking for a remedy to be used against thrips, to recommend in my answers to inquiries. I wanted something which would do the work expeditiously without causing so much loss and annoyance to the grower as continual tobacco smoking invariably causes. I am truly glad to have found something which I feel sure will be a boon to the grower and especially those who have had trouble with this pest every spring, or perhaps all through each season. I think that a good spraying once each week during the winter will keep them down and perhaps two each week toward spring will keep your plants clean and prevent those white spotted and brown edged Lawson we see so much of after hot weather sets in. Try to use it as a preventive against thrips.

NAME OF HARDY SHRUB.

Enclosed you will find a leaf and a spray of bloom of a hardy shrub for name. The bloom is white and fragrant. The spray we send you is in poor condition to send but is the best we can get at this time, as the shrub is through blooming, but it will show the shape of the blooms. T. & C.

As near as we can tell from the sample leaf and flower forwarded, the shrub is the white fringe, Chionanthus Virginica. This is one of our most beautiful, strong growing shrubs in Massachusetts. It usually blooms about the middle of June and its charming, fringe-like flowers in terminal panicles attract everyone's attention. W. N. Craig.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

ETIQUETTE OF THE BUSINESS.

Messages With Flowers.

Perhaps the first thing we think about under this title is the how and why and where of the card. How much or how little of a message, if any at all, is permissible on the visiting card which accompanies flowers? Many people do not appreciate the fact that the sending of flowers itself is an expression of sympathy, or congratulation, as the case may be. The arrangement, selection and quality of flowers should be a sufficient expression of sentiment, but customers will often ask you what inscription they shall use on a card.

"Compliments" or "congratulations" are too commonplace terms, except when you are requested to write the former on a card to accompany a funeral design! For floral offerings for any occasion the most simple and chaste style is the visiting card with the name only. For ladies, the medium sized, nearly square card is the approved size, and for gentlemen a smaller, narrow card. Where a personal message is sent, the card should always be enclosed in an envelope and sealed.

The personal visiting card is to be preferred to a card written for the occasion. Therefore, it is a good plan to have a box with indexed envelopes containing a little bunch of customers' engraved cards. Watch the supply, and when it is exhausted, let your customer know in time so that you will be able to fill her orders on a moment's notice, card and all. Be careful about placing a card written in ink in a box where it can be spattered with water from the flowers, and blotted beyond legibility.

The writing of the card and the style of delivery is indicative of the character of the firm. Flowers of very ordinary quality well packed count for more than fine quality delivered in a slovenly fashion. Don't sprinkle all boxes of flowers. I lately saw a bride's hand bouquet liberally sprinkled and delivered immediately. It would take an hour to dry before it could be used. Speaking of brides' bouquets, it is a courtesy to see that all the thorns are removed.

Be on time to the minute. Don't promise delivery at too early hours, but make your time at all hazards. If you once establish confidence in this way, you can ever afterwards dictate your own time.

Don't Attach the Cards.

As to tying on cards. This is practiced too often, especially at funerals. It is nobody's business but the family's who sends these particular offerings. Even if the cards are tied on, they should be removed immediately upon delivery. Someone at the house should take off the card and write upon the back a short description of the offering which this card accompanied, written acknowledgment of which should follow within a few days. Tie on cards only when it is necessary to prevent their being lost.

At every large funeral there should be a florist in charge of the flowers; his presence there is necessary for the best care and arrangement of the flowers. Recently here we had an instance of how two or three society ladies made havoc of a fine display of flowers on just such an occasion. Thousands of flowers were destroyed by unskillful handling. It was an outdoor funeral, and before the flowers could be packed and transported, many of the finest clusters were crushed beneath passing trains, not of Pullman cars, but of silk and lace.

In Decorative Work.

In residence decorative work there are many little courtesies which the florist will do well to observe. In the first place do as much of the work beforehand as possible. Have pots and tools clean, so as not to soil the floors and carpets. Don't scatter things about, and help to clean up after you are done. Finish one room first before leaving. Have a large sheet to protect the floor from being scratched and littered. Coming in as we do at the last moment, we necessarily make considerable disturbance, but we can reduce the annoyance to the minimum by having the work well planned and proceeding immediately to its execution. Little extras will often be asked of you at the last minute. Comply, if possible, even at your own inconvenience.

On the other side of the question, insist on your own rights; hold your own with the caterer; resist indirectly attempts on the part of the caterer to take contracts for the whole thing, decorating and all; give him to understand that your business is an art, and he has no more right to interfere with you than you have to usurp his business; let him know in time when you want the tables ready, and proceed to take possession. Measure off the space that you require on the table, and some more, but we'll consider this at some future time. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

Cattleya Mossiae Flowered by Julius Roehrs.

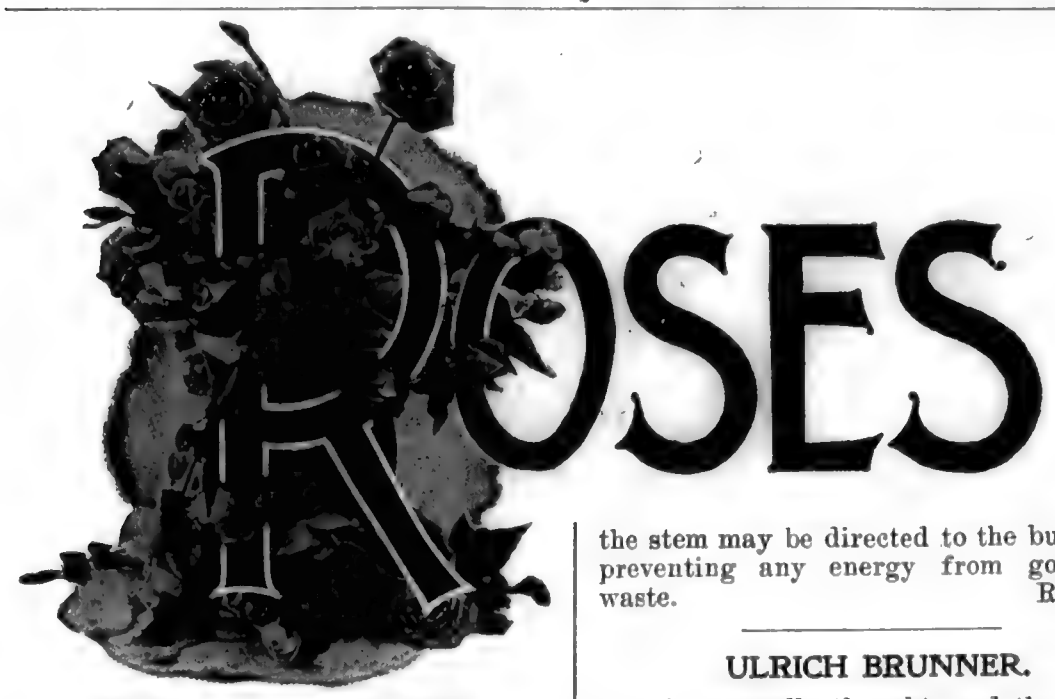
CATTLEYA MOSSIAE.

The blooming of Cattleya Mossiæ is always awaited with impatience, for it is the orchid upon which dependence is placed for cut blooms at the season of spring weddings; besides, none of the family excel it in richness of coloring, in form or in profusion of bloom. The plant illustrated was one of this season's importations by Julius Roehrs, Rutherford, N. J., and photographed April 30.

APHIDES OR PLANT LICE.

"Nearly all plants, in garden and field, and under glass, suffer from the ravages of aphides, known by a great variety of names, such as green and black fly, smotherers, and dolphins, while the disease they produce is sometimes termed 'blight.'

"They belong to a group of insects called hemiptera, which are provided with a mouth used for sucking and capable of piercing the structures of plants, upon the sap of which they feed. They undergo what is termed an incomplete metamorphosis, that is, there is no quiescent chrysalis (pupal) stage, and they feed throughout their whole existence.



"They damage plants in a two-fold manner, first by sucking out the sap, and so weakening the vitality of the plant, and secondly by stopping the respiration of the plant by blocking up the stomata (or breathing pores) of the leaves with their excreta. This excreta is not only of the ordinary kind, but also consists of a sweet gummy substance called 'honey-dew.' A few aphides, such as the woolly aphis produce no honey-dew. The skin of the plant-lice is provided with numerous glands which secrete either a waxy substance that covers the skin (rose aphis, bean aphis, etc.) or dense woolly masses (beech aphis, woolly aphis, etc.). In both cases the excreted substances have the power of throwing off water and so of keeping the insects dry.

"The reproduction in aphides is very rapid. They not only breed in the ordinary way, but they can also breed without any males being present. The effect of weather on aphides is very great. Dry hot and sultry weather is favorable to them; the same conditions check the growth of the plant, and so the plant-lice soon overcome it. An excessive quantity of manure, especially nitrogenous manure, also predisposes the plant to aphis attack.

"Aphides can easily be destroyed by spraying the affected plants with a soft soap wash. This is made by dissolving from six to ten pounds of soft soap in 100 gallons of soft water. The soft soap blocks up the breathing pores of the plant-lice, and so kills them. Quassia is sometimes added; this acts as an astringent to the leafage, and cleans it of the honey-dew and excreta formed by the aphides. For black-fly on cherry, and for all those that produce a copious flow of honey-dew, it is a most useful ingredient. The quassia chips are boiled and the extract added to the soft soap wash; six to eight pounds of chips are required to every 100 gallons of wash. Paraffin emulsion is necessary for some kinds, as woolly aphis, which may also be attacked in winter by caustic alkali wash. For those which attack the root it is best to use bisulphide of carbon injected into the soil, a quarter of an ounce to every four square yards. Care must be taken with this substance, which is both poisonous and inflammable. The vapor of bisulphide of carbon liquid, used in the beekeepers' 'smoker,' is said to be a very good remedy for green-fly, and does not injure the most delicate flowers.

"In all cases the aphides must be attacked as soon as an invasion shows itself, especially when the species of aphis has the habit, like the plum aphis, of curling up the leaves and so protecting itself."

SULPHUR FOR MILDEW.

During the summer season, when firing has to be abandoned and climatic conditions are liable to sudden fluctuations, it is almost a certainty that mildew will put in an appearance and as a severe dose of this parasite has a most debilitating effect on young stock it ought to be carefully guarded against and checked in its incipient stages.

While leaves and wood are young and tender it spreads with alarming rapidity, sapping the juices and closing the breathing pores, retarding and weakening the growth and if not checked causing entire ruin. So long as firing can be resorted to painting the pipes with the sulphur mixture will suffice, but when the weather becomes too hot for this, dusting the foliage with flowers of sulphur is the easiest applied and most effective remedy.

In order to get the full benefit of this treatment the operation should be performed during bright sunshine and the ventilators should be closed for a short time even though the temperature should approach the 100° mark, as this helps to release the fumes. The best distributor that I know of for this purpose is the Peerless blower, made by McMorran & Co., Chicago, being speedy and while using less sulphur than the older class of distributors, gives each leaf its full quota of the powder. As a safeguard this should be applied at least once a week until firing has to be resumed.

Feeding Old Plants.

Houses which are being carried over for another year's work should now receive liberal feeding, both in the form of mulch and liquid, so that during the hot weather they may not suffer. The mulch will also help to keep the roots cool and active and prevent in a measure the deterioration of bloom consequent to the hot season.

By keeping these old plants well fed during the summer the quality of wood and eyes for the winter crop will be greatly improved and the increased vigor and general healthfulness of the plants will manifest itself during the whole season.

To help keep up the size of bloom on these plants the lateral shoots should be removed before they are allowed to become strong, so that all the strength of the stem may be directed to the bud, thus preventing any energy from going to waste. Ribes.

ULRICH BRUNNER.

It is generally thought, and the quotation of only half a dozen different roses in the market reports in the trade papers seems to affirm it, that no other roses but those are largely grown. But take the hybrid perpetual rose, Ulrich Brunner, of which hardly ever is mention made in the market reports, and still there is a large establishment in Orange county, New York, which from Christmas on to Fourth of July sends every morning many hundred blooms of this grand rose to the New York markets, where they are sold along with the popular rose, American Beauty, on equal terms.

The Ulrich Brunner rose is a seedling of Paul Neyron. The color is a deep cherry red and the habit of growth is robust, throwing out long canes. It is very little subject to mildew, not at all to black spot. The foliage is dark, glossy green and if well grown and properly treated the same plants can be grown for many years, only taking care to replace with fresh stock every season such plants as have become weak.

The Ulrich Brunner gives two crops and is, perhaps, among the hybrid perpetuals, the best of the remontants. If budded on Manetti they can be dried in August, pruned in October and brought to market in January, but not so if grafted on Rosa canina. It is then necessary, in order to get best results, to freeze them, which can hardly be properly done before Christmas, and this will retard the bloom until Easter, when prices for all roses have dropped fifty per cent compared with January.

It is, therefore, very important that the grower of Ulrich Brunner should see, as a first condition of success, that every plant should be budded or grafted on Manetti. The next is to give them plenty of room on the benches; eighteen inches apart one way and fifteen inches the other way is probably the best. Then the plants can develop good, healthy wood and are apt to throw out from three to five stout canes, which will give as many "extras" and "specials" in the cutting season. The second crop can be expected from April on and is often in quantity of bloom larger than the first.

It is the practice of some to put the Brunners on the benches where chrysanthemums have been taken off, and no doubt the result can be made profitable in this way, but the taking in of two large crops of Brunners must be more profitable than one of chrysanthemums and only one late crop of Brunners. With regard to procuring first-class stock, England and Ireland have until lately given the best budded Manetti stocks, but there are some domestic growers who now equal them and among them the Storrs & Harrison Co., in Painesville, Ohio, are at the head. Otto Andreae.

PEONIES IN MISSOURI.

A large part of the early peonies in the Chicago and St. Louis markets come from the vicinity of Sarcoxie, Mo. Gilbert H. Wild is one of the leading growers in that vicinity and the accompanying illustration gives some idea of the extent and character of his fields. These are white varieties and 30,000 flowers had been cut and shipped before the photograph was taken. This was the third spring from planting for this field.

NEW VARIETIES.

[A paper by Charles H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., read before a recent meeting of the Morris County, N. J., Gardeners' and Florists' Society.]

In these few remarks I do not propose to touch on culture to any extent, but to enumerate some of the newest varieties, their place in the exhibition scale, and their peculiarities.

The seedlings raised in Australia and imported here by our enterprising growers have transformed the face of our exhibitions in the past year or two, and from present indications this is likely to continue. Two years ago, when Mrs. E. Thirkell, Lord Salisbury, W. R. Church and others flashed across our view, it needed no second glance to assure us that here we had new material and new blood with great possibilities and the trail was followed up eagerly. Last fall brought out quite a procession of new ones that created a wild sensation among chrysanthemum growers at the C. S. A. show in New York, and it is these varieties that we will deal with more particularly to-night.

The variety of the year was William Duckham and as a Japanese incurved it will hold its own for years in its color. It is the largest pink I know of and is ideal in every way, growth, foliage and habit being as near perfect as it is possible to be. In naming such a variety after our worthy fellow member, Mr. Duckham, the introducer indirectly paid this society and its membership a great compliment. It showed that he had heard something about the quality of the flowers raised in this section, which is, I honestly believe, second to none in the world.

Two other pinks appear in the Wells-Pockett set for this year, namely Leila Filkins and F. A. Cobbold, but unfortunately for them they are somewhat overshadowed by W. Duckham and probably will not be so extensively grown on that account, though either one in an ordinary year would be largely advertised and brought to the notice of the public. It is worthy of note that these three pinks produce just as good colored flowers from a crown bud as from a later one, which used not to be the case with pink varieties, so many of the older varieties needing to be taken on a later bud to get the best color.

In the crimson section great advances have been made in giving us varieties that will not burn up in the sun. This class has been very unsatisfactory for years on that account, as no grower was willing to spend time and money growing crimsons and not be able to get a satisfactory flower. H. J. Jones was the first red to give satisfaction in regard to standing sunlight, and now we have lots of them.

Maynell and S. T. Wright are the Wells' novelties, and very fine they are. Henry Barnes is darker, but one of the most telling colors set up among whites and yellows in the small-vase classes. Maynell would be more to my liking if it did not incurve so much, as this incurving habit hides the wonderful crimson coloring somewhat. In common with both Henry Barnes and S. T. Wright, it is recommended not to shade Maynell, as the full sunlight tends to make the petals reflex instead of incurve. This advice should, however, I think, not be taken too literally, our American climate being very different to the English one. You will all remember the spell of hot weather we had at the end of October last year, when not only reds, but all varieties, white and yellow included, burned badly where not shaded.

Mrs. F. W. Vallis, a variety raised, I believe, by Silsbury in the Isle of Wight, will be a grand addition to the crimsons, if it lives up to its possibilities. It is a Japanese and its long, drooping petals as they unfold from day to day show some exquisite coloring.

In what may be termed the unclassified colors there are several varieties that are very fine indeed. Miss Mildred Ware is, perhaps, the largest. In size and shape it may be compared to Mme. Carnot, of which it is a seedling, and in color much like Lady Anglesey. It exhibits some tendency to leaf spot in the small stages, but it is naturally a robust variety and grows out of this as the plant gathers strength.

Mary Inglis is another variety that is somewhat on the same color, shading off a little to terra cotta. There is a great demand for this variety, and this demand cannot be supplied in full for some years, for Inglis is the slowest variety in producing stock that I ever handled. It is a fine grower when started, but it simply will not produce suckers from the soil in the usual manner.

General Hutton is a variety that just missed being a grand yellow by being shaded somewhat with red. If we could eliminate that red streak we would have a peerless variety, for the yellow is deeper than the yellow in the famous old Golden Wedding and it is a grand grower and keeper. As it is, it loses in color if set in a class calling for yellows when competing against clean self colors, such as Col. Appleton or Mrs. Thirkell. Two other varieties that show this yellow and red combination are Donald McLeod and Harrison Dick, both ideal growers and easy to handle. While they cannot be set up in a class calling for a yellow, they are very valuable in such classes as the six sixes or in setting up a collection.

We have hitherto run altogether too much to the three colors, white, yellow and pink, in our exhibitions, and this produced a sameness that became monotonous, but now with classes that permit of staging these novel colors the general color scheme is diversified and much more interesting, and the fickle public, ever craving for something new, finds lots to interest it.

There is but one sport being distributed this year, namely, Cheltoni, the yellow sport from Nellie Pockett. The demand for this variety is far ahead of the visible supply, Nellie Pockett being so well known and liked. Next year there may possibly be several sports in the market, one a white sport from the pink Mrs. Coombes, and a bronze sport from that grand variety, Mrs. Thirkell.

We are running shy on good exhibition whites at present, and no new one is being distributed this year. Ben Wells, while it may do for a white, has a tinge of pink in it that detracts somewhat from its general appearance, although Ben Wells is well worth growing by everyone. We want a white with the purity of the old Niveus, the size of Mme. Carnot, or larger, and the constitution of W. Duckham. A white combining these qualities will have a phenomenal sale.

There is a new star rising on the chrysanthemum horizon in the person of a certain French amateur, who, it is claimed, has raised some grand new seedlings which will appear in due season. I hope it may be true, though very many of the French varieties, for some reason or other, do not do well here. Out of the thousands of French varieties imported in recent years the old Mme. Carnot is about the only one that has stayed with us long enough to get acquainted, and even Carnot has to be very carefully handled to keep it in good health.

The chrysanthemum to-day may be said to be once more on the top of the wave of popularity the world over. The bread and butter florist says there is no money in growing them for market, and certainly prices last fall were very poor, but that depression spread through every line of cut flowers, as well as the mum, and the grower himself, I think, has been largely responsible for the decline in prices by throwing on the market a vast quantity of absolute rubbish, which can hardly be sold at any price.

But the number of exhibitions and exhibitors is increasing by leaps and bounds, and new varieties are eagerly snapped up by these enthusiasts, who guard their treasures as a miser guards his gold. I have been accused of sleeping in the mum house when the plants were in flower, and while I deny that allegation, and defy that allegator, I will say this, that when a man gets a good attack of chrysanthemumitis, be he rich or poor, it will stay with him till he passes to the great beyond, recurring every fall as regularly as the year rolls round.

One runs across a man every once in a while who will tell you that though the varieties change there is no real progress in the chrysanthemum. Such a man does not follow the exhibitions or he would know better. Think over for yourself the exhibitions held by your own society in the past five years and see if we have not made progress, and what is true here is true the world over. Only a year or two ago the trade papers were gravely discussing the question of making classes separate for Timothy Eaton and Colonel Appleton. Last fall many varieties were set up that easily beat either of them in size and finish, and in another year or so they will drop peacefully out of sight, left behind and forgotten, and we shall be worshiping at the feet of some new idol that has been born in some far away corner of the earth. We may safely predict that the interest in the chrysanthemum will never wane so long as new and striking forms continue to delight us from year to year.

IN THE ROSE TOWN.

The accompanying illustrations give some idea of the extent of glass and character of the stock this season at the South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind., the photographs being taken recently. The main range shown is that of the Heller Brothers, the two houses in the foreground being those of William Dittman, formerly foreman for his neighbors and now growing Beauties for his own account, shipping his output to J. A. Budlong, Chicago. Since these photographs were taken Heller Bros. have begun a new range at the left of the picture, including several houses of the same size as those shown and one house 48x275, with six benches, with a capacity of about 8,000 teas. The firm will grow several houses of carnations this year although for several seasons the place has been entirely in roses. The new glass will allow them about the usual planting of Beauties, with an increase in the teas and space for the carnations. They are now selling most of their cut direct from the greenhouses.

COVENT GARDEN MARKET.

Following are brief notes by A. Hemsley on trade conditions this spring in Covent Garden Market, London, England:

Bedding plant trade was very good, most things making good prices, but small stuff in boxes was much overdone.

Ivy-leaved pelargoniums (geraniums) have been very abundant; the three leading sorts are Mme. Crouse, Chas. Turner and Galilee, some of the latter being a mass of bright pink bloom.

Lilium longiflorum, cut, has lately much exceeded the demand and prices have been very low.

Bunches of short fronds of Asparagus plumosus nanus are now much used and those who grow it well must find it a profitable crop.

Even now a few salemen keep to trade buyers only but since supplies have so increased many make no distinction and at holiday times the market is full of private buyers.

There is always a demand for well flowered lobelias.

Chrysanthemum segetum is now much used in place of the yellow marguerite.

Polygala oppositifolia is not an ordinary market plant but it is found that florists like it on account of its color.

Nephrolepis Westoni makes a grand plant and should prove a useful addition to market ferns.

Some of the finest roses seen this season were Mme. Chatenay cut with long stems.

The best spireas seen are of the variety S. astilboides floribunda.

Hartford, Conn.—Christy Bros. have gone out of business.

Belleville, Ill.—E. W. Guy wants to see the Improvement Association revived. It did a great deal of good last year.

Lebanon, Pa.—J. W. Fox, who has been spending several months here, has gone to Atlantic City to devote the summer to his flower store there.

Vegetable Forcing.

Fancy cucumbers hold firm in the New York market, despite very large receipts of medium and low grades from the south.

LETTUCE IN SMALL TOWN.

I am located in a small city some distance from a market and where there is no regular supply of winter vegetables. I think I could sell quite a little lettuce if I could grow it on a bench in a house of miscellaneous plants. Can it be done? What temperature does lettuce require? What kind of soil? When composted? When should lettuce be sown for the first winter crop? How far apart should Grand Rapids be planted? How long should it take to mature? F. R.

It is hardly practicable to grow lettuce in a house along with miscellaneous plants as the temperature required for lettuce is too low for such stock. A night temperature of from 40 to 45 degrees is about right for lettuce. Lettuce requires a moderately enriched soil, not too stiff. If not already done the present would be a good time for composting the material. Good sod soil should be procured and composted with well rotted barn manure in the proportion of about five loads of soil to one of manure, but it is very important that the manure be well rotted, as lettuce does not take kindly to it if it is in any way fresh. We make the first sowing for early winter use about August 20, but this crop we count on maturing in cold frames. With covering after the nights get cold we seldom fail to reap good results from this crop and can usually depend on it for our supply up to about Christmas. We make the first sowing for greenhouse work about the middle of September. This matures in time to succeed those grown in the frames. About three months is usually necessary for the crop to mature from time of sowing. About eight inches each way is necessary as space to develop good large heads of Grand Rapids. W. S. Croydon.

ASPARAGUS UNDER GLASS.

Will you kindly give me information in regard to asparagus culture under glass? Is it possible to grow it under the benches or must it have the full sunlight? What are the best varieties for forcing? What age must the roots have to produce a crop this coming winter? How close can the roots be planted and what temperature should it be grown in? J. L. D.

It is possible to grow asparagus under greenhouse benches; in fact, it is very commonly grown under such conditions. Sunshine is not necessary to the development of the growth but when forced entirely dark it will, of course, be all white. Sufficient light should therefore be given to have at least the tips green. Regarding variety, the larger growers, such as Palmetto and Colossal, are the most profitable to force. Roots should not be less than three years old, under ordinary conditions, but this depends entirely on the conditions under which it is grown. Under very favorable circumstances strong crowns can be produced in two years and the strength of the crown is the deciding point more than the age of it. The crowns can be set as close together as the roots will allow but of course must not be crowded on top of one another.

The two houses in the for ground are those of Wm. Dittman, formerly foreman for Heller Bros.

If you are going into the asparagus forcing business it will pay you to grow your own roots for one season, at least, before forcing. They can then be placed in the forcing quarters in a much fresher condition than if they have to be shipped from a distance. In lifting the crowns from the home grounds part of the soil will naturally adhere and there is no danger of drying up of the roots. Under these conditions it would not be necessary to put any material under them providing the floor is of soil or sand, but the clumps can be set on the floor just as close as they will stand. A covering over the crowns of about three inches of some loose, free material, such as leaf-mold, will be all that is necessary. If leaf-mold is not convenient, sand can be used but a stiff retentive soil should be avoided.

Forcing will be considerably facilitated by exposing to slight frost before taking inside. In the month of December, when lifting our first batch, we usually throw the clumps on the surface of the ground and leave them there until they get about 10 degrees of frost; a little more won't hurt them, but this is sufficient to make them easier started. All the roots necessary for keeping up the winter's supply should be lifted before the ground freezes too hard and stored in a cool cellar till wanted.

When the roots have been procured from a distance and have been shaken bare of soil it will be necessary to make a bed of about three inches of some material, such as recommended for covering, to lay the roots on, covering as before recommended. A temperature of 65 degrees at night will bring them along to be fit to cut in about three weeks from the time they are put in. They can be forced in a lower temperature but growth will, of course, be slower. It is not profitable to keep the roots over after forcing, it being better to throw them away and procure others for another season.

INDOOR GRAPERIES.

At first sight it seems somewhat strange that grapes are not more extensively grown indoors in this country, seeing that they can be done equally as well here as in Europe and that tons of grapes are annually imported to supply the demand in our larger cities, good fruit always commanding a good price and ready sale.

I think that the principal reason why grapes are not more extensively grown here is the expense incurred in building the houses and establishing the vines and having to wait so long for returns. When a florist starts he usually does so with small capital and, as it is a case of trying to make ends meet as soon as possible, he chooses a crop that will bring quick returns. With graperies one year must elapse before any returns can be had and even then but two or three bunches can be had from each vine, even where two-year-old canes have been planted. It is at least four years before a full crop can be had, so it stands to reason that it would not pay the beginner to build graperies. Some may say, "but why not the established grower?" The reason here is that the established grower has a business already made and no doubt his idea is to leave well enough alone in place of risking the trying of experiments. And when he builds more houses it is simply to keep step with his increasing trade along the lines already established.

But the question arises, would it pay in the end? I am rather inclined to think that it would. The fact of their having to be imported shows that there is a demand for the product. And having the advantage of a warmer climate here, less fire heat being necessary, allowing for more expensive labor, they can be grown as cheaply here as in Europe, ought to reach the markets in better condition and ought to command equal if not better prices.

In building the houses the idea of a cheap structure need not be entertained, as grape vines once established, borders well made and general conditions favorable, they ought to last and continue to give good crops for from sixteen to twenty years. They will continue to bear much longer than this, but as the vine ages the bunches get smaller and small bunches don't command the top market price.

In the construction of the house it must first be decided whether the border is to be all indoors or if an outdoor border is also to be allowed. In the latter case the foundation must consist of a series of arches to allow the roots freedom to gain the out side border. Much diversity of opinion exists regarding the utility of an outside border, some claiming that it is an advantage and others that it is unnecessary, but I believe that both theories are right under certain conditions. For an early house, one that has to be forced during the winter months, it is better to have the border all inside, as the difference in the temperature of the soil outdoors from that inside is too extreme. But with a late house, the outdoor and indoor temperatures being about equal, I believe that the outdoor border is of advantage. In an early house the grapes are usually cut as soon as ripe, as the earlier they can be got into the market the better the price procured; hence there is no necessity of hanging them on any length of time after they are ripe, but with the late house the case is different. The idea here is to keep them as late as possible, and as the atmosphere of the house has to be kept as dry as possible after ripening, where an outdoor border is provided the moisture procured from it prevents the fruit from shriveling.

In either case a brick foundation is the best and cheapest in the end. This must be built well down as the soil must be excavated to a depth of about four feet to allow space for ample drainage and sufficient depth of border. A span roofed house running north and south is the most suitable construction for a grapery, as it allows equal light to the vines on both sides of the house. The house may be built of any desired length, but the most suitable width is about twenty-two feet. About fourteen feet from the floor to ridge is a convenient height. The brick foundation should rise about one foot above the level of the soil and to allow of good bottom ventilation the upright sides should not be less than two and one-half feet from the sill. Ample top ventilation should also be provided on both sides. This allows of a free circulation of air during calm weather and during windy weather cold draughts can be avoided by putting air on the sheltered side only.

The Market.

The market is dull this week, though there is about as much business as usual toward the end of June. The commencements are over and most of the weddings, the few left for the present week consuming a fair amount of stock.

Kaiserins are in crop and, with Beauties, form the rose mainstays. Sweet peas are awfully plentiful and cheap. The knowing ones now pull out all their vines but a few rows and care for those. Valley is in fair demand, though it does not always clean up. Peonies have lasted over this week, thanks chiefly to Elmer Gealiring and his cold storage enterprise. Smilax has taken a bad tumble and can be bought at one-half the price of a week ago. There are many pretty outdoor flowers in. They add variety but do not, as a rule, yield much revenue. Last, but by no means least, carnations are of better average quality; that is, the poorer ones are disappearing, making the supply smaller. They are only in fair demand.

A New Charter.

Last Tuesday notice was given in the daily papers that application would be made for a charter under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania for the Leo Niessen Co., wholesale florists, 1217 Arch street, Philadelphia. The officers of the company will be Leo Niessen, president; W. E. McKissick, vice-president, and Arthur A. Niessen, secretary and treasurer. The capital will be $20,000 full paid. The business was started in 1895 by Leo Niessen, on Thirteenth street above Market. After two years he moved to Juniper street above Market. Two years later he moved to the northwest corner of Thirteenth and Filbert streets, where the business was carried on for the next three and a half years in much larger quarters. Here Mr. Niessen was joined by his brother, Arthur A. Niessen and by William E. McKissick. Fifteen months ago the business was removed to the present handsome quarters at 1217 Arch street. The wisdom of this step has been shown by the gratifying increase in business during the past year. Mr. Niessen has been considering the present step for fully two years. He and his associates have the best wishes of their many business friends.

Roses.

The weekly articles of "Ribes" published in the REVIEW are recognized by our rose growers as the best notes of the day on rose culture. His knowledge, frankness and clearness are admitted on all sides and to him both beginners and masters of the craft are indebted for many valuable suggestions.

His article last week on the folly of delaying the replanting American Beauty roses beyond the month of June is of great interest. In this "Ribes" voices the opinion of our leading Beauty growers. There is, however, a feeling against this hitherto accepted rule. One of our very best and largest Beauty growers believes in late propagation and often plants quite as many houses in July as in June. These late houses are frequently planted out of 2x3-inch pots just starting into growth, the idea being to secure plants that have never had the semblance of a check. Experience has shown that these houses paid better in many cases than those planted earlier with fine plants from larger pots. Local conditions largely govern these results. "Ribes" considered the hot summer of our central states and understood his market. Here on the eastern seaboard our heat of summer is apt to be tempered, while the Beauty market is poor until very late in the fall. Some growers plant Beauties just for a fall crop, following with something else. Then, too, the surplus of every variety of flower during part of the fall has its effect on the price of Beauties, so that the houses cut from early often get a very poor start in dollars and cents over those planted later. I give these facts not to dispute the truth of what "Ribes" says, for I think he is right in the main, but because the demand for good Beauties in early summer should be met; we are too apt to get into a rut.

NOTE

The Editor is pleased when a Reader presents his ideas on any subject treated in the REVIEW. As experience is the best teacher, so do we learn fastest by an exchange of experiences. Many valuable points are brought out by discussion.

Good penmanship, spelling and grammar, though desirable, are not necessary. Write as you would talk when doing your best.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO HEAR FROM YOU.

Notes.

The return game of baseball between the nines representing the Flower Market and Robert Craig & Son will be played at Myers & Santman's, Wyndmoor Station, Pennsylvania Railroad, on Saturday, June 25, at 3 p. m. Both sides are confident and a good game is expected. Jump on the train and cheer your nine.

M. Rice & Co. are busily engaged receiving and storing their new importations. Many pretty novelties are promised.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have a dainty little daisy basket in their show case. The new office is complete now and looks well. Further improvements will be made before any new stock arrives, very soon, it is thought.

Charles E. Meehan spent a couple of days this week at Ocean City with his family, enjoying a well earned breath of salt air.

S. S. Skidelsky, who is one of the best informed men in the business, says that the active spring has in some measure made up for this hard winter with the florists throughout the country.

C. F. Edgar & Co. have samples of their new cornucopia flower holder. It will save time in wrapping and promises well.

Edward Reid has had some good valley orders lately.

Joseph Heacock has been shipping palms in large numbers.

Answers to Correspondents.

REVIEW readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia to "Phil," in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses or the Flower Market. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

No. 16. What is the best disposition to make of the room under the benches in a greenhouse? Can bulbs such as tulips, French hyacinths and Paper White narcissi, be grown there to advantage?

The best growers do not as a rule utilize the space under the benches for growing plants or bulbs. Bulbs, mushrooms and even chickens have been successfully raised there. The danger lies in damaging the stock underneath through water or bruising and in the accumulations of dirt.

No. 17. What are the average returns and the average expenses for wages on a greenhouse plant of from 10,000 to 50,000 square feet of glass?

An extremely difficult question, the answer depending much on the season, the kind of stock grown and the ability and liberality of the grower. During the past, a poor season, one place of 50,000 square feet earned 40 cents a square foot, which is decidedly above the average. I doubt whether the average would reach 35 cents a square foot of ground space covered. Regarding labor, one man can properly care for from 5,000 to 6,000 square feet of space, exclusive of firing.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week was a busy one for our florists, with work for school commencements and weddings. There seemed to be plenty of stock at the wholesale houses, still the market fluctuated greatly as to supplies, one day plenty of fancy stock, the next hardly any. At the present writing there is plenty of stock in the market for all demands in the first grades; fancy is somewhat limited. Now that school work is over and only a few weddings left for this month, the social work is about ended for the season. Today (Monday) we find the market in good supply in roses. American Beauties of the fancy grades still go for $2 to $3 per dozen. Some fairly good Beauties can be bought for $1.50 per dozen, with shorts at 75 cents. Small tea roses in Brides, Maids, Jacqs and Liberty demand the same price as a week ago, $5 and $6 per 100 for the best, poor stock as low as $1 per 100. Sweet peas are plentiful, white and lavender selling the best; 50 cents per 100 is asked and in 1,000 lots they are much cheaper. The bulk of the carnations that are coming in are of very poor quality. The demand for fancy stock is big. These sell clean, but common stock is often dumped. Candidum lilies are seen everywhere in the florists' windows. Plenty of peonies are still to be had at $2 and $3 per 100.

Planting out is about over and the growers are again breathing easy. All report about the same, the best season we ever had and about sold out of everything good.

Various Notes.

The American Seed Trade Association will open the twenty-second annual convention tomorrow (Tuesday). Mr. Schisler, of Schisler-Corneli Seed Co., has charge of the local committee on entertainment. A large attendance of seedsmen is expected. The meeting will take place at the Forest Park University Hotel, near the World's Fair grounds. C. E. Kendel, of Cleveland, Ohio, is already here and S. F. Willard, the president, is expected in the morning, also Chas. McCullough, vice-president. The entertainment will consist of a boat ride, a visit to Shaw's Garden and a day at the World's Fair. The local committee, consisting of Messrs. Schisler, Plant, Prunty and Bushnell, has all arrangements completed to entertain the visitors.

The exhibition of peonies in the Horticulture building from May 28 to June 7 was large and fine. The following firms made exhibitions: Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.; J. F. Rosenfield, West Point, Neb.; Charlton Nursery Co., Rochester, N. Y.; C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y., and G. & M. Wild, of Sarcoxie, Mo. There were nine classes, all of which were competed for.

C. Young & Sons Co., Wm. Schray & Sons, Michel Plant and Bulb Co., and Shaw's Garden are the local exhibitors in the Horticulture building, all making splendid exhibits.

Recent visitors in the trade were A. Dietsch, Chicago; J. H. McFarland, Harrisburg, Pa.; Thos. B. Meehan, Philadelphia, and H. P. Kelsey, Boston.

Henry C. Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros. contemplates building a fine conservatory and store at the corner of Washington and Taylor avenues, to cost $8,000. The plans are being made by Mr. Thompson. J. F. Windt, at 901 Bayard avenue, is building a show house at his place to cost $3,000. The work is also being done by Mr. Thompson.

Frank H. Weber will leave this week to attend the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen, which takes place at Atlanta, Ga., June 22 to 24. Mr. Weber is a vice-president of the association.

Carl Beyer, chairman of the bowling committee, has made arrangements with Martin Kern, who is the champion of the United States, for the use of his twelve alleys at Twenty-second and Franklin avenues for the bowling tournament of the S. A. F. in August. These are the finest alleys in the city, within easy reach of the convention hall. Mr. Kern has promised to do all in his power to make the stay of the florist bowlers at his alleys long to be remembered.

The lady bowlers have had several meetings of late and a program has been mapped out for the entertainment of the visiting ladies during their stay. Their bowling will take place on Wednesday morning at the same alleys where the men bowl that afternoon. Miss Tillie Meinhardt, Mrs. F. C. Weber, Mrs. Theo. Miller, Mrs. F. M. Ellis, Mrs. J. J. Beneke and Mrs. F. H. Meinhardt will have charge of the entertaining, assisted by the other ladies of the club.

C. A. Kuehn, superintendent of trade display, is already a very busy man perfecting plans as to the display, with applications for space coming in by every mail. Otto Koenig and F. M. Ellis are also busy with their duties. Messrs. Ammann, Beyer and Beneke are also working hard.

Among the week's visitors was Charles W. Riemers, Louisville, Ky.

Pansy Exhibit of Peter Brown, Lancaster, Pa., at St. Louis World's Fair.

Bowling.

Of the 115 games rolled by the Florists' Club since the Milwaukee contest, the first five are likely to be the teams that will represent St. Louis during the next convention:

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Cut flower business is dead; the demand for stock is very light. June weddings all occurred the early part of the month, leaving nothing for the florists but funeral work and orders for commencements. There are not enough of these to create any special demand.

The quality of roses and carnations is somewhat better than at this time last year, and the quantity is so great that only the very best are sold, the balance reaching the dump. Many growers do not seem to consider the season; they ship and pay express charges on stock, which, from its appearance when it reaches the wholesalers, must have been worthless when packed. Peonies have been a drug on the market this season.

Various Notes.

H. P. Joslin shipped the Cut Flower Co. quantities of fine Spanish iris. This wholesale house had several large shipping orders for Beauties last week.

William Kroek reports a good demand for vegetable plants last week.

The Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co. is still cutting very fair roses and carnations and promises a fine cut of Kaiserins a little later.

The date of the Florists' Club's picnic will be announced at the next meeting, Tuesday evening, July 5. The committee is arranging a very elaborate program. I am sure there will be "large doings."

The various civic clubs in our surrounding towns have been doing a good work by offering prizes for the best kept gardens and lawns, and in this way arouse much interest in plants and shrubbery, from which the florists and plantsmen are benefited. Wide-awake nurserymen are taking advantage of this and their agents are booking good orders for fall delivery.

Last Saturday the Bellevue Civic Improvement League gave its second annual flower show. Thousands of people witnessed the display, which was very large. This league issued a general invitation to all of the community to send flowers for exhibition. Besides these, a large collection of shrubbery was sent by Wm. H. Moon Co., of Morrisville, Pa., and Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia. Local florists who exhibited were Fred Burki, B. L. Elliott, Geddis & Blind Brothers, John Bader, E. C. Ludwig, N. A. Blaney & Co., G. & J. W. Ludwig, H. P. Joslin, H. C. Frick, and the Schenley park conservatories. The influence of this society is very noticeable in the community; the lawns are well kept, front fences are removed and hedges planted in their place. J. W. Vickerman, of Bellevue, is secretary of the league. The craft congratulate him on his good work.

Hoo-Hoo.

BOSTON.

The Market.

There has been an overabundance of flowers in the market the past week and many were sold with difficulty at low rates. Roses are now coming in small and in some cases badly mildewed. Outdoor hybrids, such as Jacq., Luizet, Magna Charta and Brunner, are now abundant and of very fair quality. They sell well for weddings and school graduations. Carnations are becoming poor and druggy; sales of poor stock were reported at 25 cents per 100 last week. Fancy stock reaches $1.50 to $2. Peonies have been very abundant. A large call for weddings cleared them out fairly well. Prices on off colors were as low as $1 per 100, while as high as $8 was secured for very fine stock, from $2 to $5 being the average price. The present week will end the supply of these. Outdoor sweet peas are now coming in plentifully but are inferior to indoor stock as yet, stems being short. They clear out well. Water lilies are getting common. Iris Hispanica from outdoors is abundant and of fine quality. Such flowers as stocks, antirrhinum, sweet william and feverfew have been druggy, but the demand for school and children's day services in churches has helped to prevent a serious glut.

Various Notes.

The annual rose and strawberry show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society opened on Tuesday and is an excellent one. Some of the leading exhibitors are Miss S. B. Fay, M. H. Walsh, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Walter Hunnewell, E. J. Shaylor, T. C. Thurlow, George Hollis, Robert Cameron, the Arnold Arboretum, R. & J. Farquhar & Co. and Dr. C. S. Minot. Miss Fay is, as usual, the largest and most successful rose exhibitor. Strawberries, grapes, peaches and other fruits are of fine quality. A detailed report will appear in the next issue of the Review.

General regret is expressed at the serious accident which happened to E. Sutermeister a few days ago. Mr. Sutermeister was thrown from his delivery wagon and painfully injured, one leg being broken by the wheels which passed over him. His many friends at the wholesale market and elsewhere wish him a speedy recovery.

Recent visitors to Boston include C. A. V. Frith, the well known lily grower of Bermuda, and George A. Bishop, superintendent of the botanic gardens at Hamilton, Bermuda. Mr. Bishop is devoting much of his time to rectifying the lily disease. He says the chief cause of so many poor bulbs being shipped from the island in the past few years has been that the growers sold every good bulb they produced, in nearly every case retaining the very poorest stock to plant for themselves. He is succeeding in gradually changing this system and expects in time to be able to stamp out the disease.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. have an especially fine and remarkably distinct new form of Lilium longiflorum, which they hope to be able to place on the market in the future. The trumpet of the flower is much longer than in any other form of longiflorum and the foliage very narrow, resembling that of Dracæna indivisa. John Farquhar discovered this variety growing wild on his last visit to Japan and thinks it is going to be a very valuable acquisition.

J. W. Manning, the well known landscape architect, was the essayist at the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on June 21. The attendance was again remarkably good and everything points to a boom for the society next fall such as it has never before experienced.

A free flower show was held on June 18 and 19 in Andrew School, Oswego street, Boston, one of the poorest sections of the city. Large contributions of flowers and flowering plants came from Prof. C. S. Sargent, Miss M. S. Ames, Mrs. C. F. Sprague, E. V. R. Thayer, Walter Hunnewell, R. C. Hooper and Dr. C. G. Weld. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. furnished palms and other foliage plants. The flowers comprised large quantities of peonies, roses, rhododendrons, kalmias, irises and many other seasonable flowers, all artistically arranged. The residents in the section where the show was held are mostly immigrants of the poorest class. They attended the show in thousands and thoroughly appreciated the efforts of Miss May Sargent and the other society ladies who so successfully engineered the exhibition.

General regret is felt at the decision of Archibald Smith, manager of the seed department and one of the firm of Joseph Breck & Sons, of Boston, to leave America. Mr. Smith has bought the George Prince seed business at Oxford, England, and takes possession of the same next month. He has been with the firm of Breck & Sons sixteen years and much of their success is due to his skillful management. Some handsome presents were made to Mr. Smith by members of the firm, employes and others, and his many friends wish him much success in his new business.

A spell of hot, dry weather has been experienced for several days. A good generous rainfall would be appreciated. Florists report an unusually late season for bedding plants, but the demand has proved fully up to the average.

Hardy roses, contrary to expectations, are unusually good. Strawberries are at the height of their season with us, "three boxes for a quarter" being a frequent cry. They are a splendid crop. Hay making is becoming quite general, an excellent crop all round. Potatoes and other vegetable crops look fine and there is an unusual paucity of bugs on crops in general, for which we are deeply grateful. We cannot find much fault with the season to date.

At the Patten-Thayer wedding last week there was some elaborate decorating. Peonies, pink and white, mountain laurel, now at its height here, roses and syringas were largely used. Miltonias and odontoglossums were freely used in the church and produced a fine effect. Galvin and A. P. Meredith, Mr. Thayer's gardener, had charge of the extensive decorations.

Weekly prize exhibitions commence at Horticultural Hall on July 9, continuing until the end of August. While Boston is looking forward to the coming meetings of the chrysanthemum and rose societies, another extensive exhibition to come about the early part of June, 1905, is mooted. This will probably not be included in the society's schedule, but if it goes through as it undoubtedly will it promises to eclipse anything previously seen in the Hub.

There is a grand show of hardy perennials at present to be seen at the Blue Hill Nurseries. The proprietor, Julius Heurlin, has one of the finest assortments of these plants in America, including many new or scarce varieties. This nursery is one of the best kept in New England.

The following circular from the Boston Co-operative Flower Growers' Association has been issued to all its members. Perhaps it may tend to prevent the threatened split in its membership:

"At a meeting of the directors Saturday, June 4, 1904, it was voted that the rent of stalls for the year commencing October 1, 1904, shall be $25 per year, with premiums for choice as heretofore. After all expenses for the year have been paid, including the usual dividends to the stockholders, the balance of the profits for the year shall be returned to the stall holders. The division of profits to each stall holder shall be in proportion to the amount of rent and premium paid."

The Market.

This is ordinarily one of the best weeks in the year but, while total sales may not be far from normal, it is probable that average returns for the stock marketed were never before so low for the third week in June. There is the normal amount of business doing and twice the normal amount of stock is moved, but the demand makes no appreciable impression on the supply and it is necessary to force sales on practically every item. The only exceptions to this are Beauties and valley. Really good Beauties are practically out of the market and receipts are light on what would be called fair summer stock. The result is that wholesalers are having considerable difficulty in filling orders in this department. The demand for valley for wedding bouquets is keeping this item cleaned up and has resulted in an advance in price where practically everything else in the market is on the down grade.

There continue to be heavy receipts of tea roses, with quality not so good as it was a week ago. The best stock moves fairly well, but it is almost impossible to get rid of the low grades. Carnations are, however, holding back worse than the roses. Much of this stock is of very good quality, but it seems impossible to move it at any price and the poorer stock is generally sold out at from 3 to 5 cents per bunch.

The peony crop is very nearly at an end, but there are still very large daily receipts, the quality varying from very good to very poor. Some of the stock is selling for 75 cents per dozen where large quantities of other varieties are scarcely bringing express charges. However, the trade is getting tired of handling the low grade peonies and the demand is noticeably better for the good stock, which is as it should be. There are considerable quantities still in cold storage, so that there are likely to be plenty of peonies for Fourth of July, if anybody wants them.

The market is full of sweet peas, longiflorum and candidum lilies, gladioli and many odds and ends, the latter of little value under existing conditions. Ferns are down to $1.50 per 1,000 and smilax is bringing good money because of the scarcity in asparagus.

Various Notes.

Thomas Best has returned from Akron, Ohio, where he was for a brief period in partnership with E. J. Bolanz in his retail store.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett have been down to St. Louis to see the exposition, but were not favorably impressed with its state of completion.

Weiland & Risch are not adding to their glass this year, but are already planning for a big extension next spring if business conditions next winter are up to their anticipations.

Miss Jessie Ludlow and C. E. De Wever were married June 16. The bride is a granddaughter of Edgar Sanders and has been employed as cashier of Vaughan's Seed Store many years. Mr. De Wever is of the Belgian plant-growing firm of De Wever Bros., and has been acquiring familiarity with the American trade at Vaughan's for some time, having recently been in charge of the exhibit at St. Louis. The couple will make their home in Belgium.

J. S. Wilson and George A. Kuhl took possession of the Albert Fuchs place last Thursday. It is their intention to continue the retail business and largely extend the wholesale plant trade.

The Florists' Club will hold its final meeting for the season tonight. The newly drafted by-laws have been placed in the members' hands and will be up for adoption at this meeting.

At the installation of the eminent commander of Englewood commandery last Friday night M. G. Holding, of the Sprague-Smith Co., presented the eminent commander with a magnificent bunch of peonies.

Ed. Winterson is suffering with rheumatism in his left knee, which the doctor says comes from working on the damp cement floor.

The George Wittbold Co. has been getting in a big crop of peonies from its Edgebrook establishment. They are rebuilding one of their houses at the city place for growing chrysanthemums. Louis Wittbold has been at Wheeling, Ill., for several days this week.

Louis Winterson and Miss Steen are to be married June 29. The groom is a member of the E. F. Winterson Company and is already receiving many congratulations.

Henry Klehm has returned from a two weeks' stay in Iowa, where his firm, Klehms' Nurseries, are doing a large amount of landscape work this season.

J. G. Steinfield's place at Forty-third and Drexel boulevard, is closed and the landlord has attached the fixtures to secure $180 arrearages for rent.

John Muir will have a very handsome, modern place at Forty-seventh and Grand boulevard, which will be ready for occupancy in a few days.

Anton Then is still bringing in Crimson Ramblers.

There is a move on foot to cause all the wholesale houses to close at 5 p. m. during July and August.

This week has seen an unusual number of visitors, including Geo. A. Kuhl, Pekin, Ill.; H. E. Larsen, Galva, Ill.; D. B. Long, Buffalo, N. Y.; John Morehead, Detroit; E. C. Kranz and family, Muscatine, Ia.; Mr. Pallas, of J. W. Vestal & Son, Little Rock, Ark.; W. H. Drake, Kenosha, Wis.; Harry Balsley, Detroit; the Hulsizer brothers, Des Moines, Ia.; H. E. Philpott, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

This is commencement week in the schools but it doesn't help the dressmakers or the florists. Superintendent Cooley has decreed that "simple muslin frocks" are to be worn and no flowers or other gifts allowed. The daily papers give some space to Mr. Cooley's autocratic rulings, several "poems" on the situation having been published, but, unfortunately, sentiment seems to be with him in this case and a pretty strong effort will be required to restore the former custom during Mr. Cooley's term.

The death of Charles Netchert, proprietor of the Boston Store, and his funeral on Wednesday made a considerable call for funeral work, of which the south side retailers had the bulk.

Charles Klehm says that their cold storage peonies are reduced to about 2,000 dozen and he expects to clean up in good shape by the middle of next week.

C. M. Dickinson is attending the sessions of the republican national convention and officiating as an assistant sergeant-at-arms.

E. E. Pieser says Monday's business was like a small Christmas, but that the demand has fallen away since then.

The republican national convention has filled the city with strangers and it is booming certain lines of business at a great rate, but is not affecting the florists' trade to any appreciable extent. Hauswirth, in the Auditorium, gets a little extra and so do others on Michigan avenue, but in general the "big guns" are too busy with politics to have any time for social affairs.

Bowling.

On Tuesday evening the bowlers finished their try-out for places on the St. Louis team. The following is the record for the evening:

Player.	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th
Hauswirth	147	177	154	154	158
Asmus	144	133	148	157	179
F. Stollery	144	180	170	155	197
Scott	163	157	172	134	135
G. Stollery	173	177	136	144	187
Stevens	158	159	140	187	166
Degnan	125	155	163	148	173
F. P.	100	128	107	132	96

The following are those who participated in the requisite number of games to qualify, with their averages. The first five will constitute the team, with the others as substitutes:

Player.	Games.	Total.	Av.
F. Stollery	25	4,402	176
Scott	30	4,657	155
Balluff	25	3,850	154
Degnan	25	3,772	151

Four straw hats were offered as prizes in the contest, Fred Stollery and George Asmus winning in the straight match and P. J. Hauswirth and John Degnan in the handicap, it being stipulated that no player could win more than one prize. The handicap was arranged by George Stollery, as follows: F. Stollery, scratch; Asmus, three added to average, Balluff and Stevens five, Scott ten, Hauswirth and Degnan fifteen, Huebner twenty and E. F. Winterson twenty-five.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market remains in a condition of inactivity. The temperature approaches 100 degrees again and while the supply is not excessive it is far in advance of present requirements. The quality of the rose stock is unsatisfactory, mildew being much in evidence. Little improvement is looked for before the end of August. Lecakes & Co. have completed the work of placing 10,000,000 of galax leaves in cold storage. Their lilies from their own pond in Connecticut are in demand.

The Slocum Disaster.

No greater catastrophe has ever occurred in New York than the burning of the General Slocum and no tragedy has ever been less excusable. Over a thousand lives have been sacrificed. Whole families have been swept out of existence, dozens of survivors are insane and gloom covers the city. The only florist who has suffered the loss of loved ones is August Schmidt, of Avenue B, whose mother, wife and baby are among the missing. He has the universal sympathy of the trade in his bereavement.

Club Outing.

The New York Florists' Club has made every preparation for its excursion on Wednesday, June 29, and as the boat engaged is absolutely safe and special precautions as to safety will be made, it is hoped none who had arranged to attend will be absent. Everything promises a large attendance and the committees have worked hard to provide all the requirements for a happy reunion. The Isabel will leave the dock at East Thirty-first street at 9:45 on Wednesday morning. If any have not secured tickets the treasurer, Charles Schenck, of 44 West Twenty-ninth street, should be at once notified so that ample arrangements may be completed for the dinner at the grove. Those who desire to compete for the various prizes are requested to give their names and addresses to President Traendly, as the number of contests provided for will make system a necessity if they are completed. The list of contests and the prizes offered, with the names of the generous donors, are given fully in the souvenir program.

William V. Cleary, of Cleary's Horticultural Hall, Vesey street, has offered a special prize for a special event at the outing, a $35 suit of clothes for growers only in a unique race wherein fifty flower pots are used, each having hidden numbers from 1 to 50. The winner is the man whose pots aggregate the largest amount when the total of the numbers is found. It is a race in the dark. The pots are placed twenty-five yards from the starting point and only one can be carried at a time. Every grower with grit and ability to run will strive for the new suit and John Scott, Louis Schmutz and David Mellis are among the entries to date. This will be one of the most interesting events of the day.

The Weekly Florists' Review

"I regard the Florists' Review as a wonderful salesman; I sold all my stock through The Weekly Florists' Review."

Various Notes.

J. K. Allen and wife leave on Wednesday of this week, via the steamer Majestic, for a trip to Europe. This is the first visit of the veteran wholesaler to the old country and he well deserves it. Mr. and Mrs. Allen will return about September 1, after visiting England, Scotland, Ireland and France. He has the Kew Gardens, Covent Garden market, Windsor Castle and King Edward on his list and Killarney and the blarney stone for side trips before he returns. His visit is largely in behalf of the new library to be erected at his home town, Kearney, N. J., and his appointment as commissioner and official inspector on the continent is an honor of which he has good reason to be proud. The business will be in competent hands during his absence.

Joseph Fenrick will open a wholesale cut flower store at 48 West Thirtieth street, next door to James McManus, on July 1. Mr. Fenrick has been in the employ of Ford Bros. for many years and has an excellent reputation.

Elliotts' palm sale on Tuesday brought out a large attendance and prices realized were very satisfactory. Next Friday will likely close the auction business for the season.

The veteran Charles L. Allen is enjoying the St. Louis exposition. Mr. Walter has returned with glowing descriptions of its beauty and grandeur. The majority of eastern florists will, however, wait for the convention. The Baltimore & Ohio railroad seems to please all who contemplate the trip and a large and happy party of, it is hoped, close to 100 will make the journey from this center. Many ladies will attend from New York.

S. B. Wertheimer, of Lion & Wertheimer, has returned from his western trip and visit to the fair at St. Louis. He speaks very highly of the efforts being made by Brother Beneke and his staff of faithful lieutenants towards making the S. A. F. convention a great success.

John P. Cleary celebrated his thirty-first birthday on Monday of this week.

George M. Geraghty, once of Denver, and lately with Thomas Young, Jr., will summer at Rockaway Beach.

James Carroll, of Thorley's, will summer as usual at Atlantic Highlands.

James Fraser, of Morristown, N. J., superintendent of Cedar Court and the father of gardeners, was in the city Monday. Tuesday, the longest day of the year, he celebrated his "steenth" birthday.

Charles Millang has returned from a business and pleasure visit to Buffalo. He speaks highly of the Buffalonian's hospitality, especially of "Billy" Kasting. Mr. Millang is handling a large stock of lilies and Brunners.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Guttman and family will spend the summer at Woodcliff Inn, Freeport, L. I.

Bowling.

The new alleys of the New York Club are proving very satisfactory and the attendance grows as the time for the St. Louis convention approaches. Last week the scores were:

Guttman	156	133
Lang	156	156
Thompson	124	190	138
Gibbs	140	119	128	135
Shaw	123	134	153	117	129

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

Under glass, nature is only of partial help, it is mostly art that does it; and there seems to be a growing notion that this art is not sufficiently paid for.

Lysichitum camtschatcense, which is native to northern California, has been grown at Kew for a number of years. In a boggy portion of the rock garden it has barely held its own but a plant in a moist position in the Himalayan house flowered this year for its second time.

Rhododendron racemosum is one of the most beautiful of all the rhododendrons, the largest plants at Kew being about two feet high, of loose spreading habit, and densely covered with a mass of bright pink flowers, each of which was about an inch in diameter, and sweetly scented. No doubt the plants will attain to much larger dimensions. The flowers not only terminate the ends of the branches, but are also disposed in dense clusters in the axils of most of the leaves of the previous year's growth, thus forming long, dense racemes of flowers. Seeds are produced in abundance, and these furnish a ready means of propagation. The seedlings usually flower freely when about three years old.

SOLIDAGO SHORTI is so good and flowers so freely that one feels inclined to include it among the best twenty "back row" border plants. It is a vigorous species, growing six feet high and bearing spiræa-like, plumy inflorescences of a soft yellow color. The lateral branches of this inflorescence are nearly two feet long, and so vigorous is it that one may cut a huge sheaf of flowers from one plant.

CAROLINE TESTOUT is said to be one of the best varieties of roses for culture in the vicinity of smoky towns.

THE ORDINARY mealy bug, which is very abundant and injurious, is destroyed in its adult stage by a single fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas, but to be absolutely free from this pest it is well to repeat the operation every ten days, so as to destroy newly hatched insects.

IT IS interesting to recall that on May 20, 1804, seeds of dahlias were received in London from which plants were raised and flowered the same year, and that ever since the dahlia has been uninterruptedly cultivated in British gardens.

SUPPOSING that some readers may be unaware of the behavior of Incarvillea Delavayi after it has flowered abundantly in any one year, it may be well to observe that a large number of the plants so flowering fail to grow in the next year. Cases have occurred in the writer's experience. In one instance, all the plants that flowered one season remained dormant the whole of the next year, and the gardener concluded they were dead. I informed him in all probability the plants would restart the next year, and so it turned out.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y. Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE American Association of Nurserymen is in session this week at Atlanta, Ga.

PAINESVILLE, O.—John Brick has gone to Aurora, Ill., to enter the employ of the Aurora Nursery Co.

THE eighteenth annual convention of the American Association of Cemetery Superintendents will be held at Chicago August 23 to 25.

THE Wisconsin State Horticultural Society will hold its annual summer meeting at Lake Geneva June 29 and 30. There will be an exhibition of strawberries and flowers.

CHASE BROS., of Huntsville, Ala., are getting their new nursery near Mercury in first-class shape. They have built a road which will permit heavy teaming out of the property in bad weather.

FOLLOWING the convention at Atlanta this week the nurserymen will visit the famous Georgia peach orchards, including those of Hale, the Berckmans Co. and others, traveling on a special train.

AT the meeting held at New Haven, Conn., last week the New England Association of Park Superintendents voted to change its name to American Association of Park Superintendents. Officers elected were: President, W. S. Egerton, Albany; secretary, John W. Duncan, Boston; treasurer, J. H. Hemingway, Worcester, and several vice-presidents.

IN writing a friend, C. S. Sargent, of Arnold Arboretum, Boston, said: "We had the most disastrous winter that I can remember. Deciduous-leaved shrubs and trees seem to have suffered more than evergreens this time, although practically every rhododendron bud in this part of the world is killed or injured; azaleas, on the other hand, being all right. We have lost many shrubs which have been growing for twenty years at least, and have never suffered before. It will take a long time to get over the effects of such a winter."

LILACS NOT FLOWERING.

Will you please tell me through the valued columns of your paper the reason why a purple lilac bush five years old does not bloom? It was a rooted sprout from a large tree that blooms profusely every year. It is in a shaded position in our front yard, but the old tree is in the shade just as much with the same soil, etc. The tree seems to be thrifty and healthy. Have seen trees all over town younger and smaller than this one blooming. A. C. T.

The fact that our correspondent's lilac grows well but fails to bloom is conclusive proof that the shady location is the cause of this. Probably if left until it reached a considerable size it would bloom to some extent, but never so well as in an open sunny spot. Lilacs to flower well must be grown away from all shade. We would advise our correspondent to remove the plant carefully this fall, say the first week in October, to a sunny location where there is good loam. Give it a dressing of well rotted manure once a year and it will flower as satisfactorily as any of his neighbor's plants. If he needs a quick growing shrub for his shady location let him plant Lonicera Tatarica, or L. Morrowi, or some of the strong growing viburnums or snowballs.

W. N. CRAIG.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business continues very satisfactory, with a steady demand and adequate supply. The moderate weather has helped greatly in sustaining the value of stock and also the quality. Some extra fancy carnations are still to be had and they find a ready market. While the majority of roses are now very small, still there are some that may be rated as very good. Peonies are fast becoming a thing of the past. Last week great quantities of them were sold and the demand at present is greater than the supply. A few gladioli are to be had and sell fairly well. Some very fine sweet peas are coming in from local growers and they are very good property. Lilies of all kinds are scarce and, as usual, there is a good demand for them. There have been plenty of candidums but now they are about over. Eastern fancy ferns are in and sell well. Other greens are equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

The committee in charge of the social meeting of the Florists' Society to be held Thursday evening, June 23, has everything in readiness. The election of officers will take place, followed by their installation. There will be cigars, liquid comforts and sandwiches for the men, and ice cream, cake and lemonade for the ladies. All club members and the ladies are invited to be present.

The florists' outing committee has decided to hold our annual outing at Coney Island on July 21. At present their plans are scarcely matured but there will be the usual bowling contests, also ball games, besides any number of other amusements that are on the grounds. The committee is making especial effort and a great time is looked for this year.

Yet another wholesale house is to soon bud out in our midst. This time C. E. Critchell, late of the Atlanta Floral Co., but whose home is in this city, is the man behind the enterprise. He will open within the week at 36 East Third street. The large size of the wholesale business in this city is at last being realized and we can scarcely do more than to welcome the late arrivals to share the vast profits that have been made in the wholesale business since a wholesale house was first started in this city some eighteen years ago.

All the wholesale houses of importance have made an agreement to close their stores at 5 p. m. beginning July 1, till further notice. This will not interfere at all with the trade, as during the summer months there is practically no business after 3 o'clock. C. J. OHMER.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 32d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

VISITED CHICAGO:—C. Dalwig, Milwaukee.

REPORTS from the Pacific coast show sweet peas suffering and a very short crop in prospect.

J. M. THORBURN & Co., New York, report the season's business as about normal with them.

GRADUS peas in sacks of one and a half bushels in the pod brought $2.50 on the Chicago market June 21.

BEANS are going into dry ground at many of the southern Michigan points. It is feared that this may cause a poor stand.

SWEET corn has had a better chance during the past week, owing to the few warm days, and the outlook for a crop is better.

REPORTS just at hand from Canada show the growing pea crops there to be progressing very favorably, with the weather fine.

UP TO date there are no reports showing that cucumber is not doing well; on the contrary, everything seems to be favorable so far.

PEA crops are sufficiently advanced in many sections to need inspection, and within the next ten days growers will have their men out for this purpose.

MANY of the canners are short on tomato plants. There has been considerable effort put forth by them the past week to secure good, stocky plants without much response.

SOME of the onion set fields in the vicinity of Chicago would make good pictures at present. The warm weather is pushing the crop along and much activity in weeding and cultivating is noticed.

DRY weather is reported from all the sections where onion sets are growing and it is thought that a short crop will be the result. Chicago sections are suffering more than any from lack of rain at present.

THE A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, Ia., reports a very successful season and far beyond its expectations. They are greatly increasing their growing department this spring, especially in the line of sweet corn and vine seeds, of which they are heavy producers. They had a surplus after filling contract orders in full this spring and were able to furnish quantities to pickle factories and canning concerns. This firm is only seven years old.

ARCHIBALD SMITH, for many years manager for Joseph Breck & Sons, Boston, has sailed for England, having bought the Prince seed business at Oxford, which he will hereafter conduct. Prior to his departure the Breck employes presented him with a gold watch, the firm remembering him with a suitably inscribed silver service. Mr. Smith's father died in Scotland only a month ago and two brothers are in the seed business there.

THE few advices so far at hand from St. Louis are to the effect that there is a good attendance and considerable enthusiasm at the convention. Election of officers will take place Thursday, June 23.

DEATH OF H. C. AGNEW.

Hugh C. Agnew, of Santa Clara, Cal., died June 11, aged 50 years. It is thought that his demise was caused by glanders contracted from a horse which he drove. He suffered intensely before the end. Mr. Agnew was born in Iowa but removed to San Jose while a young man. For some years he and his father were engaged in fruit raising but about fifteen years ago they went into seed growing, Jesse Agnew becoming a member of the firm. The business has prospered steadily and they now have many hundreds of acres in seed crops in the Santa Clara valley and in Contra Costa county. Mr Agnew was highly respected, both in the seed trade and in his own community. The remains were cremated at San Francisco June 13. A widow survives.

VITALITY AND GERMINATION.

Of the few things which the United States Department of Agriculture has done for the assistance of the seed trade Bulletin No. 58, on the Vitality and Germination of Seeds, is one of the most important. It is a technical paper by J. W. T. Duvel, published as a pamphlet of ninety-six pages, largely devoted to tabular and other details of experiments to test loss of vitality under different systems of storing and shipping seeds. The preface says:

Because of variation in the amount and quality of each year's crop it is frequently necessary for seedsmen to carry over large quantities of seeds from one year to another. Such seeds often lose their ability to germinate, and either are a loss to the seedsman or, if they are marketed, cause still more serious losses to those who plant them. Since 1899 Mr. Duvel has been engaged in a general investigation of the causes affecting the vitality of seeds, with special reference to the conditions under which they are stored commercially. This investigation was begun in 1899 under the Dexter M. Ferry Botanical Fellowship at the University of Michigan, and since September 1, 1902, it has been continued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The general method pursued has been to store seeds experimentally under all sorts of conditions, and afterward to ascertain the exact percentage of germination. It is now possible to speak with precision of the extent of damage caused by careless methods of storage, to express in actual figures the greater liability of seeds to loss of vitality under the warm humid conditions existing in the South Atlantic and Gulf States than under colder and drier conditions, and to demonstrate the utility of storing seeds, when they must be kept in a humid climate, in moisture-proof packages.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.

Tell your readers that up here in Grand Forks, N. D., where the high winds have been known to change a county line and blow the mortgages off 160-acre farms, that the cut flower trade, as also blooming plant trade, this spring was far better than in any previous year. We sold out clean and needed more cut flowers. Let the growers go in a little stronger and we will dispose of more and larger stock. E. O. Lovell.

Salem, O.—Harry T. Miller has arrived here from Alliance and taken the active management of the business of J. E. Bonsall, which he recently purchased and of which O. W. Bundy has since been in charge.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The first annual June show of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in the Gasford building on Wednesday, June 15, and proved to be very successful, there being a very fine display of roses, flowers from hardy shrubs, hardy perennials, strawberries and a wonderfully fine lot of vegetables.

Some of the winners of prizes were: J. Knoodle, first for best collection of outdoor roses; H. Kastberg, first for best twelve hybrid roses; Mr. Boreham, first for vase of roses; T. A. Lee for best collection of hardy perennials; H. Kastberg, for best collection of flowers cut from hardy shrubs; C. Wilson, for best hydrangeas; J. Dunbar, for best quart of strawberries; S. Bradley, for best collection of vegetables, twelve varieties; J. Dunbar, for best collection of vegetables, six varieties. Mr. Boreham was awarded a certificate of merit for collection of cauliflower and cucumbers. Mr. Boreham was also awarded a certificate of merit for Adiantum cuneatum.

BALTIMORE.

There is little to look forward to for some time after this week, as commencements will be over, as well as most of the June weddings. All last week good stock of all kinds was scarce. This week has started off with a little better supply. However, good roses are still scarce. Sweet peas are now coming too freely. Gladioli from the south are coming in heavily and find little demand, except for the light colors. The price ranges from $2 to $4 per 100 spikes. Roses are going at from $2 to $4; carnations, 60 cents to $1.50; sweet peas, 25 cents to 50 cents per 100. Candidum lilies have made their appearance.

The Baltimore and Washington clubs are arranging for a joint outing at Chesapeake Beach next month. A. F.

INDIANAPOLIS.

On June 18 John Grande, who has conducted a retail business of considerable proportions at 1822 Shelby street, sold his business, greenhouses, dwelling and all to Herman Shilling. The consideration was $5,300. Mr. Shilling takes charge as soon as the transfer can be made and will continue the business along the lines on which it has been conducted by Mr. Grande. Mr. Grande has five acres of land west of the city on which he intends building a range of houses to grow for the wholesale trade. John says he needs the fresh country air to build up his health again. His usual weight is about 350, but during the strain of a heavy season he has lost at least ten pounds and John says it won't do. May his shadow never grow less. A. B.

PACIFIC COAST.

LILIES FOR CHRISTMAS.

At what time should we in British Columbia plant cold storage longiflorum lilies and spiræas to get them in bloom for Christmas and January sales? Are cold storage bulbs and roots of these plants to be relied upon? B. C.

There is no difficulty in flowering Lilium longiflorum at Christmas time in British Columbia, providing the bulbs are planted early in August, which is the time the season's crop is generally at hand. They can be planted either in pots or boxes and placed outside until the first of October, when they should be brought into the house and given a temperature of 60 degrees at night and about ten degrees higher during the daytime. No difficulty will be experienced if the bulbs are good. This is the usual way of forcing, but if cold storage bulbs are used and the grower has no heating apparatus in his greenhouse, the bulbs should be planted in July in pots or deep flats and, as these bulbs respond very quickly to warmth and moisture, they should be kept outside until about the first week in September, when they should be brought into the house. They will at this time have attained the height of probably six inches and unless the weather is very unfavorable there will be no trouble in cutting a splendid crop of flowers during December and January.

It is only during the last few years that growers on this coast have been able to get cold storage bulbs, but those I have tried have been of good quality throughout and I have had much better success with them than with Lilium Harrisii. Lilium longiflorum bulbs that are fresh imported are very slow to start and when the bulbs are planted in August and not forced at all it is difficult to get them in bloom by Easter, but with cold storage bulbs that have had a long rest I have found it a very easy matter to flower them at any time with a little bottom heat.

Spiræa Japonica can be handled easily, also. Cold storage clumps should be planted about the middle of September in pots and kept under the bench until about the first of November when they will have made plenty of roots and can then be placed in a temperature such as is given to lilies. They will bloom in December and January and are easily grown. There is no particular demand for cold storage spiræas, as it is a flower that is usually forced for Easter trade, in which case the fresh imported clumps usually obtainable in November will fill all requirements. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

School commencements and June weddings have done considerable toward brightening up trade during the last few days. Funeral work is scarce and only the south side florists seem to be getting much of it. The weather is cool again, after several weeks of scorching sunshine, and it is quite a relief to both the retailers and growers, to have the change. Flowers, especially indoor roses, had begun to suffer and they had to be kept in an ice box to have them at all presentable. Carnations are much more plentiful than last week and are somewhat lower in price. This is more noticeable, however, in the cheaper grade of flowers, as all the fancy stock, of which there is no abundance, still holds its price. Such varieties as Portia, Scott and Joost can be had at $1 per hundred and even less. Hill, Crocker, Schwerin and Estelle wholesale at about double that price and Lawsons that are free from thrips easily bring $3 per hundred. Roses are poor, being weak-stemmed, small-flowered and poor colored. There is a large quantity brought in daily and dumped for whatever price they will bring. Good Beauties are selling wholesale today at $1.50 per dozen; Testout, Bride and Maid at 50 cents; Liberty and Carnot, 75 cents per dozen. Sweet peas are still in their prime and are sold to the stores at from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen bunches. Shirley poppies, bachelor's buttons, coreopsis, gaillardias, gladioli and some outdoor roses fill in very nicely. Smilax is completely out of season, but there are plenty of ferns of all kinds except the wild maidenhair.

Various Notes.

The Kien Co., of Elmhurst, are making preparations to erect several more greenhouses.

Clarke Bros., of Portland, Ore., who have their carnation growing plant in Fruitvale, Cal., are cutting more flowers at present than they can use and the Oakland florists are deriving the benefit of the surplus.

Mrs. John McLaren, wife of our superintendent of parks, while on their trip to Europe had the misfortune to slip and break her leg on the train near Denver. Mr. McLaren had to continue on his journey without his better half, who will remain in Colorado until his return.

Prof. Jepson, of Berkeley, has gone to Sacramento to classify and label all the plants and trees in the state collection at the Capitol grounds.

H. M. Sanborn and son, the Oakland florists, have returned from their trip to Yosemite Valley.

Wm. Gange, for many years head gardener to A. K. P. Harmon, of Oakland, is at present laying out the grounds of the Oakland Golf Club. These links are on the site formerly called Rockridge park, and will be the finest on the Pacific Coast.

W. W. Saunders, the well known bulb grower, now located in Fresno, is in town. G.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

SOME YEARS since we directed attention to the enormous difference in the produce of non-seeding plants of garden asparagus and those which produce heavy crops of seeds. Also to the necessity for giving the seedlings time to show whether they will seed or not before using them in the formation of beds. The success achieved by the French growers in the production of large growths is usually attributed to their skill in the preparation of the beds, and in the subsequent use of manures; but there can be no doubt that the results they obtain are largely due to the selection of non-seeding plants for the beds.

THE ONLY WAY to obtain the full wealth of flowers the lilacs are so well able to yield is to keep them to single stems, and, if the stem rises to a height of three or four feet before dividing, it will be a distinct advantage. The suggestion here made is applicable to all varieties, but applies with double force to those of recent introduction, which for the most part are grafted on the older forms, and consequently will soon be replaced by the growth from the stock unless that is kept in subjection.

NO OBSERVANT gardener is likely to gainsay the fact that both great successes and great failures often follow the care, or otherwise, of supposed trifles. What are sometimes imagined to be little matters, whether we have control or not over them, frequently make all the difference between these extremes, and, consequently, there often is only a very narrow margin between the two at the beginning.

ABERDEEN, S. D.—C. A. Spink's greenhouse was struck by lightning in a recent storm and considerable glass broken.

ROSE NIGHT AT ORANGE.

A deferred meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held at the society's rooms in Orange, N. J., on June 17. The postponement was caused by a desire to enjoy a special rose night. The tables were filled with the product of the estates in this neighborhood, chief among which were seven vases exhibited by John Crosby Brown, from the hand of Peter Duff, a separate stand being thought worthy of a vase of Baroness Rothschild of fine form. A large vase of a variety of blooms exhibited by William Runkle, raised by Dietrick Kindsgrab, not for competition, received the society's first-class certificate. The interest of the evening, however, centered in twenty-seven named varieties exhibited in the amateur section by a lady, one of A. D. Rose's clientele, entered in the name of her brother, C. H. Wilmer, of Montclair. It received a first-class certificate.

Other plants and flowers shown included a superb Cattleya gigas, remarkable for size and number of blooms and compact form, due probably to its having been grown near the glass. It was from William Barr and grown by Arthur Bodwell; a vase of white peonies of extraordinary size from Peter Duff; a seedling poppy closely resembling orientalis from A. C. Jenkins, of Llewellyn Park, grown by George Von Qualen; several vases from O. D. Munn, grown by John Hayes; sweet william from A. C. Van Gaasbeck, grown by William Bennett. In pots were several Nephrolepis Piersoni from Peter Duff, a specimen Phyllotænium Lindeni from William Runkle, and a large array of fruits and vegetables.

The judges of the evening were John L. Collins, John Hayes and Joseph B. Davis. One new member was placed in nomination.

Conceded to be the best of all Adiantums.

A GREAT ACQUISITION.

The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM originated at Utica, N. Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits.

The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all Adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it.

INTRODUCER'S DESCRIPTION. Free grower, the darkest green of the Adiantum family and longest stemmed. It has also the most graceful foliage; the average length of the fronds measuring 30 inches. It is by far the best keeper. Cut fronds can be kept fresh several weeks in a cool place. It is also one of the best ferns for a dwelling house. I have given presents of this fern to several Utica friends, and from my own observation note it grows better than the Boston fern. I gave up rose cultivation some ten months ago in order to devote all my attention to fern cultivation for cut fronds. I find from the same amount of bench room this fern pays me $1.50 to every $1.00 obtained from roses. PETER CROWE.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during June is not considered to be up to former years. This may be more noticeable on account of the heavy supply of all kinds of flowers. Roses and carnations have been especially plentiful and good carnations have been quoted during the week at $5 per thousand. However, at present writing the demand seems to be a little better, the supply decreasing somewhat. The outlook for the balance of the month is better than the forepart of it. Peonies are with us in quantity and are bringing good prices. The demand for this flower seems to be increasing every year and in the short season that it runs a great quantity of them are handled.

Various Notes.

J. S. Simmons has just finished renovating his store and has certainly added very materially to the appearance by the addition of several very large mirrors, together with the general overhauling of the interior. He is aiming to make up in style and appointments what his store lacks in location.

D. J. Sinclair has just returned from a two weeks' trip in Muskoka lakes where he spent the time in fishing.

INDIANAPOLIS.

According to the Sentinel, A. Wiegand & Sons are one of the oldest firms of the kind in the city, the business having been founded by Anthony Wiegand, who still remains at its head, nearly half a century ago. Later he admitted his two sons to partnership, George B. and Homer L. Wiegand. The establishment maintained is one of the most extensive of its kind in the state and consists of large greenhouses, offices and salesrooms at Nos. 1610 to 1620 N. Illinois street, and gardens and hotbeds on the corner of Thirtieth and N. Illinois streets. The former covers fully half a square, there being 40,000 feet of glass in the greenhouses. The gardens and hotbeds are devoted especially to the raising of early spring flowers, garden plants, etc. Wiegand & Sons enter into practically every department of floral work. They have built up a large and increasing business entirely by their own able efforts and won wide popularity by their enterprise, courtesy and upright business methods.

KANSAS CITY.

Florists in Kansas City report quiet business for the last week. Stock is scarce and very poor. Roses are small and carnations no better. American Beauties are all off crop. Out of town shipping trade was about all we had.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Ellsworth and family leave for St. Louis Monday night to be gone about ten days or two weeks at the Fair.

The death of Richard Jarrett, one of our oldest florists, occurred Saturday, June 18, aged 62 years. He has been in the greenhouse business here since 1870 and leaves a wife and seven children.

STONEHAM, MASS.

Mrs. Hattie Frost Parker, wife of Arthur S. Parker, a leading florist of this place, died June 9, aged 38 years. Besides the bereaved husband two children are left to mourn her loss. Mrs. Parker was active in church and charitable work and enjoyed a large circle of acquaintances. During her illness of several months the esteem in which she was held in the community was shown by the many kind ministrations of neighbors and friends, for which the bereaved husband is deeply grateful. She was an active member of the Unitarian Church of Stoneham, a charter member of the Old People's Home of that town, a member of Helpers' Circle, Kings Daughters. Possessed of an attractive personality, sympathetic by nature and with a rare faculty of making lasting friendships, her demise is mourned. Funeral services were held Sunday, June 12, Rev. William Lloyd, of the Unitarian Church, assisted by Rev. Fister, of Arlington, officiating. The services were largely attended by relatives and friends, and the floral tributes were magnificent, the display being rarely equaled at a private funeral. Among the tokens of regard was a very fine standing wreath from the flower growers of Boston, Mr. Parker's business associates.

Baltimore, Md.—William Halliday recently sold the greenhouse property which has been occupied for many years, but has now secured a new and very desirable location near the Liberty road, where a large establishment will be built up.

Red Bank, N. J.—The premium list has been issued for the seventh annual exhibition of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society to be held here November 1 and 2. Copies of the list will be sent by H. A. Kettel, Fairhaven, N. J.

PRODUCTS

They Kill Bugs

They are PURE NICOTINE products, containing NO AMMONIA, EASILY APPLIED and DO NOT INJURE OR DISCOLOR THE MOST DELICATE FLOWER OR FOLIAGE.

Used and Endorsed by Leading Growers from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

SCARBORO, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1904.

HENRY F. MICHELL CO., Philadelphia.

Dear Sir:—It is the most satisfactory agent for the destruction of Greenfly ever brought to our notice; clean, quickly applied and effective. As you know, we have been heavy buyers of this product, all of which has been used in our own greenhouses. And as actions speak louder than words, we think no recommendation on our part is necessary. F. R. & P. M. PIERSON.

BURLINGAME, CAL., Sept. 18, 1903.

E. H. HUNT, Florist, Chicago, Ill.

We have given To-Bak-Ine (Fumigating Paper) a fair trial and are more than pleased with the results. To-Bak-Ine certainly does the work and in short order, too. Yours truly, E. W. McLELLAN.

TO-BAK-INE Fumigating Paper

Is an especially prepared paper thoroughly saturated with pure nicotine, making it the most powerful insecticide known. The ease with which it is used and the fact that it does not injure any flower or plant strongly recommends it.

1 box (12 rolls).....60c; 1 box (144 rolls).....$6.50.

To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper sheets measure full 36 inches. They are longer and contain over 25 per cent. more nicotine than other similar products.

TO-BAK-INE LIQUID

Is a CONCENTRATED solution of PURE NICOTINE adjusted by chemical assay; freed from ammonia. For spraying or vaporizing it is unequalled, both as to effectiveness and economy.

Full description and directions found in our To-bak-ine booklet, sent free.

Quarter pint can, 60c; half pint can, $1.10; 1 pint can, $2.00; 1 gallon can, $15.00.

MT. CLEMENS, MICH., Nov. 6, 1903.

E. H. HUNT.

Gentlemen:—Having used your To-Bak-Ine products in all its forms, will say that your To-Bak-Ine Liquid is the article for our purpose, as it does its work effectively without injuring the most sensitive blooms and it is so easily applied. You can book us as regular customers, as we are more than pleased with same. Yours very truly, JOHN BREITMEYER'S SONS.

NEW CASTLE, IND., October 1, 1903.

E. H. HUNT, Chicago.

Dear Sir:—The To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper is all right. We will order some more of it as soon as we need it. It is the thing to use on teas. Very respectfully, HELLER BROS.

TO-BAK-INE Fumigating Powder

Kills all kinds of APHIS.

"AN ARTICLE OF MERIT -- UNIFORM IN STRENGTH." Produces a slow fumigation which in some cases is very desirable. It is unlike any other powder in the market as it contains no sand; freed from all ammonia, and a definite amount of pure nicotine is added, making it uniform.

50-lb. bag .....$1.50; 100-lb. bag .....$3.00.

DETROIT, MICH., October 26, 1903.

E. H. HUNT.

Dear Sir:—At last I think you have found a perfect article for the destruction of aphis, etc. in the greenhouse. The sample which you sent me for trial of your new Fumigating To-Bak-Ine even killed the black fly on chrysanthemums. Its price is also within reach of all florists and so simple and easy in its application. Yours, GEO. A. RACKHAM.

LINCOLN, NEB., Jan. 1, 1904.

KANSAS CITY.

Florists in Kansas City report quiet business for the last week. Stock is scarce and very poor. Roses are small and carnations no better. American Beauties are all off crop. Out of town shipping trade was about all we had.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Ellsworth and family leave for St. Louis Monday night to be gone about ten days or two weeks at the Fair.

The death of Richard Jarrett, one of our oldest florists, occurred Saturday, June 18, aged 62 years. He has been in the greenhouse business here since 1870 and leaves a wife and seven children.

STONEHAM, MASS.

Mrs. Hattie Frost Parker, wife of Arthur S. Parker, a leading florist of this place, died June 9, aged 38 years. Besides the bereaved husband two children are left to mourn her loss. Mrs. Parker was active in church and charitable work and enjoyed a large circle of acquaintances. During her illness of several months the esteem in which she was held in the community was shown by the many kind ministrations of neighbors and friends, for which the bereaved husband is deeply grateful. She was an active member of the Unitarian Church of Stoneham, a charter member of the Old People's Home of that town, a member of Helpers' Circle, Kings Daughters. Possessed of an attractive personality, sympathetic by nature and with a rare faculty of making lasting friendships her demise is mourned. Funeral services were held Sunday, June 12, Rev. William Lloyd, of the Unitarian Church, assisted by Rev. Fister, of Arlington, officiating. The services were largely attended by relatives and friends, and the floral tributes were magnificent, the display being rarely equaled at a private funeral. Among the tokens of regard was a very fine standing wreath from the flower growers of Boston, Mr. Parker's business associates.

Baltimore, Md.—William Halliday recently sold the greenhouse property which has been occupied for many years, but has now secured a new and very desirable location near the Liberty road, where a large establishment will be built up.

Red Bank, N. J.—The premium list has been issued for the seventh annual exhibition of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society to be held here November 1 and 2. Copies of the list will be sent by H. A. Kettel, Fairhaven, N. J.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

NEW FORMS of the more popular market ferns are brought forward from time to time but really new forms of other ferns are seldom seen. The new variety of Lomaria ciliata, raised at Edmonton, and exhibited as L. Mayi, is therefore the more interesting; moreover, it is a beautiful fern, with long, arching fronds of a rich green color, and of a much more graceful and elegant habit than possessed by those of the type.

I HAVE SEEN the purple cobæa used upon a white-painted trellis against a stone house, with most excellent effect. Some gardeners allow cobæas to ramble over the outsides of too sunny greenhouses, thus securing a natural shade within, and a unique beauty without.

A VERY FINE new garden plant was shown last season under the provisional name of Nicotiana rosea. It has now proved so good and grows so freely from seed that it has been re-christened N. Sanderæ. Whether of more than annual duration we do not yet know, but the plant can be located either as a half-hardy or a hardy annual. It grows from two and one-half to three and one-half feet high, and produces a profusion of blossoms on branching spikes; the flowers are like those of N. affinis in form, but their color varies in different plants, from light rose to richest rose-red.

A PLANT OF Odontoglossum crispum Cooksoniæ, one old and one new bulb, recently sold at auction for $3,350. It was in a lot from N. C. Cookson, eighty-one plants realizing over $25,000.

I WONDER how the clever little Jap gauges his profit on his dwarfed trees, for, whatever the latter may be, one cannot say much for the quickness of the returns when one hears of a specimen growing a matter of 300 years, and then selling for $80, and the natural decision arrived at is that pigmy tree growing is not such a paying business as the present trade in boomed potato plants.

THE CULTIVATION of the cornflower is of the simplest. The seed should be sown where the plants are to bloom, and light, open positions should as far as practicable be selected for the groups. Sowings may be made at the end of March, or early in April; but the best results are obtained from sowing at the end of the summer. Plants raised from seed sown at that period become more deeply rooted, and make a more vigorous growth than do those obtained from spring sowings, and continue in bloom a much longer period. The seedlings should be thinned moderately in the autumn, and receive their final thinning to four or five inches apart just as new growth is commencing. Spring raised plants will not require so much space, as they do not grow so vigorously. Where liberal supplies of cut flowers are required during the summer months a row each of the blue and white forms should be grown in the kitchen garden, preferably from autumn-sown seed.

HEATING.

What would be the size of steam boiler to supply 4,000 feet of 4-inch pipe in hot water heating? Would it be advisable to use a good second-hand steam boiler in this way? Would the openings necessarily have to be 4-inch? A temperature of 60 degrees is needed and the outside temperature sometimes goes 15 degrees below zero. A. A.

Good second-hand steam boilers, particularly return tubular boilers, make first-rate hot water heaters. It is not absolutely necessary that the opening in the boiler be four inches in order to supply 4-inch pipes in a heating system but if it is not the efficiency of the boiler is reduced in proportion to the size of the opening, by the throttling of the flow through the opening. It is not expensive to have the hole in the shell of the boiler cut out to the proper size, four inches, in this case, and have a flange bolted in place into which a joint of the supply pipe can be threaded, or, if cast iron, a short piece of wrought pipe can be used to make connection at the boiler and this packed into the bell of a cast section.

To heat the 4,000 feet of 4-inch pipe it will require a boiler with 600 square feet of heating surface, that is, the area of the tubes plus the area of the shell exposed to the fire should aggregate 600 square feet of surface. A boiler ten feet long, thirty inches in diameter and carrying thirty-four or more 3-inch tubes will give sufficient heat for this length of pipe provided the pipe is properly arranged and graded. It is impossible to tell whether this will maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in the houses without knowing the size and exposure of the houses. L. C. C.

AURORA, ILL.—Peter Freeman has torn down one of his greenhouses preparatory to building three modern houses to meet the needs of his steadily increasing business.

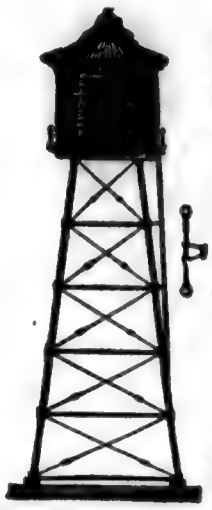
Why FLORENCE



Boilers are being used in greenhouses is because they please.

Columbia Heating Co.

40 Dearborn Street, CHICAGO.

Distance No Bar.

We have had several letters from florists in different parts of the country stating that they would like to buy our outfits, but consider that they are too far away from Louisville to be able to do so advantageously. This is not the fact. There is no state in this country that has not at least several of our plants. They are so made as to be readily shipped and can be put together by any intelligent workman.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

EXPLANATORY

Establishment of Albert Fuchs.

TO THE TRADE. Some weeks ago I announced in the various trade papers that my Establishment and Contents would be sold at auction on June 15th and 16th to the highest bidder. Within a few minutes after the time the auction was to be held, two prominent gentlemen in the trade bought the Houses and Stock on an option of 30 days (See Chicago notes, Florists' Review, June 16th; and American Florist, June 18th). This option has not been taken advantage of, and as my doctors insist on my leaving the country at the earliest possible time, the entire plant is again offered at a fixed price, and if not disposed of previous to July 7th, all except my retail store, two houses and their contents, will positively be sold at auction and to the highest bidder on Thursday, July 14th, 10 a. m. sharp. I take this opportunity to thank my many friends and members of the trade who were disappointed at not being able to buy at the previous sale, and assure them that unless the entire plant is sold at private sale previous to July 7th, (in such event this will be announced in the trade papers,) the auction will be held at time stated hereintofore and without reservation. Very truly yours, ALBERT FUCHS, 2045 N. Halsted Street, Chicago.

"The finest stock of Palms in the West." The consensus of opinion of many up-to-date florists who have visited our plant within the last month.

If you cannot attend the auction in person or send a representative, either myself or E. F. Winterson Co. will look after your interests. Don't fail to send remittance to extent of 10 per cent. with your commission. Make all checks payable to Greenbaum & Sons, bankers.

50,000 Palms and Ferns. (The Choicest in America.) Any orders sent in previous to auction will be sold at prices named in this list. Shipment will be made same day order is received. (No order less than $10.00 at prices named.) Satisfaction guaranteed.

MESSRS. E. F. WINTERSON CO., Superintendent of Auction.

Make Checks Payable to { GREENEBAUM & SONS, Bankers, 83-85 Dearborn St., Chicago

We hereby authorize you to bid in for us at the auction of the ALBERT FUCHS GREENHOUSES the following goods at the price stated and we enclose 10 per cent of the total purchase which you guarantee to return within 3 days after the auction, should the stock be sold at a higher price than we bid, or send us the goods within one week from date of sale carefully packed.

SURPLUS LIST FOR FALL OF 1904.

These varieties have all bloomed on our place and are true to name and not at all mixed. The sizes given are as follows:

Small are plants of one or two stalks of this year's growth. One year since divided. Medium are plants of three to five stalks of this year's growth. Two years since divided. Large are plants of six or more stalks of this year's growth. Three years since divided.

Customers wishing a few plants we refer to our illustrated retail catalogue, where full descriptions are given. Not less than ten plants of a kind can be ordered at the prices given here.

The larger sizes can be cut for division on a basis of three good plants to each five stalks. Any peony plant is much surer to bloom and will be 20 per cent. stronger if moved in September, so that new roots may form before freezing down. This gives a great advantage to home-grown stock over imported plants, which invariably come too late. These prices are also for larger plants than are usually sent from Europe and are, in fact, lower than the same varieties can be bought for in Europe. Besides, we guarantee our stock true and will replace with three any plant which proves not true to name.

We begin shipping early in September when orders will be filled in rotation. We make no charge for packing.

We also issue a list of fifty other sorts of which we have only a few plants to offer; sent free on request.

WHITE.

No. 3. Mount Blanc or Solfatare—(Calot), early, fragrant; small, 40c each; medium, 75c each; large, $1.00 each.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

A Piece Combining Two Styles.

The distinctive feature of this combination design is its two styles of finish. The star is plain, made solid with the carnations. The crescent admits of a much looser arrangement without destroying its outline. If you can have the frame for the two pieces made together it will be much easier to handle. The star measures between any two opposite points about one-half the distance between the points of the crescent. The star should be well set up on the easel, the point of the easel striking it about the center of the back.

First of all, bronze the easel and the cross piece which supports the star. Then it may be trimmed, or partially trimmed after your own fancy. When such wires are not bronzed they must be wrapped or covered with green, and this becomes rather monotonous when it is done on every piece, besides making a confusion of straight lines. This latter should always be avoided in design. After filling in the entire piece with sphagnum, lining with ferns, and wrapping as in other pieces before described, cover the sphagnum filling of the crescent with a solid green background of ferns and secure them in place by wrapping with No. 36 wire. Next proceed with filling the star.

Filling the Star.

White carnations stemmed on three-quarter picks, as was done for the pillow and broken column, compose the entire filling of the star. Cover the top and edges solid, making a smooth, plain surface. In such a place as this mechanical skill counts for everything. There is to be no trimming of any kind in this part of the piece. It is the positive, pivotal center of design, while the crescent and its trimmings constitute the loose rays and variations of light and color.

Filling the Crescent.

While putting on the green background of the crescent, point the ends each with the tip of a fern leaf, as is plainly seen on the right point. The edge of the crescent is here covered with smilax. Stem a medium-sized string on a whole or three-quarter pick. Insert one of the stemmed ends near the top point of the inside edge. Follow the edge of the design upwards and around the point down the outside edge as far as the length of the smilax will permit. Stretch the smilax tight. Stem the other end and attach it to the piece. Start another string at this point and continue until the whole edge, inside and out, is covered. Be careful to bury the stub end of the pick well out of sight in the sphagnum. The sight of one toothpick is enough to spoil the appearance of a fine piece.

The filling of this crescent is of Bridesmaid roses, Dutch hyacinths of the same color, freesias, ferns and candidum lilies. The Dutch hyacinths selected for this purpose are the loosely flowered spikes. Most of them are double, where the flowers are few on a stalk. Cut the stems off close to the lower flower and insert whole picks from the bottom about half the length of the picks up the inside of the stem and wrap with No. 36 wire. If the stems are too soft and thick to use in this way, make a passage for each one into the sphagnum and re-pack the moss around it. Tie down across the frame with No. 36 wire somewhere near the tip in between the flowers.

Stem the roses just below the decisive point of the stem, and if too long to keep their places after being inserted in the sphagnum, tie down as with the hyacinths. Considerable rose foliage should be stemmed with the flowers. The roses should not be monotonously set in, one way or the other, but from about the center of the piece begin to point toward each end of the crescent, with a few flowers here and there breaking the line, and seeming to fall out of place. These should be securely wired by wrapping, where they fall.

I have tried to make it possible here to single out the individual flowers in the crescent. They are not close enough together to crowd one another and to cover the background space, because the background is already laid in with green.

The candidum lilies should be stemmed in the same way as the hyacinths, and the freesias like the roses, as also are the ferns used in the group with the candidums, on the upper edge of the crescent against the easel. Observe that the five fern leaves appear to spring from the same point, like the growing plant.

The last of the trimmings is the dove bearing the rose. Wire the feet securely on the cross wire and adjust as shown in the illustration. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

THE BEDDING PLANT TRADE.

The season for bedding out was two weeks late in starting this year and on May 20 nearly everyone was considerably behind the average season's sales, but by Decoration day nearly all were fully up to last year's record, so great was the rush in the last ten days of May. The bedding plant trade is practically finished at Decoration day in most localities in normal seasons but this year it extended well into June and even as late as the present date there is still something doing in this line, so that the result has been, with few exceptions the best season on record, and in many localities far ahead of the ordinary spring business. Coming after the most expensive winter in years, the outcome has been most gratifying, serving to retrieve the loss in profits of the generally unsatisfactory winter and put hundreds of the craft ahead for the year.

Good prices have been realized where good stock was provided. Because of the cold, cloudy, backward spring much of the bedding stock was not ready at the usual time. This was particularly the case with geraniums, well flowered plants being in strongest demand at Decoration day, while supplies have been larger since, as the stock came into bloom. One of the items in short supply and scarce ever since the trade got fairly under way, was English ivy. This is largely used in filling window boxes and lawn vases and every year larger quantities are required for covering graves in cemeteries. Vincas, too, were sold out early. Alternanthera has been in demand and echeveria, but largely for cemetery use, the carpet bedding which formerly consumed such quantities of these plants having fallen into disuse. Practically everything is now sold out cleaner than for several years, and the production was larger than ever. On the whole the plantsmen are to be congratulated on the splendid outcome of a season which had an inauspicious start.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Mignonette.

About the middle of July is a good time to sow mignonette. I am not going to recommend any particular variety. All are good when well grown, and most growers select their plants and save their own seeds. Allen's Defiance, when true, is an excellent variety for winter use. A solid bed has the advantage that it keeps the plants fresh and growing till late in the spring, but if the crop is to be thrown out by April 1 to make room for bedding plants, then a raised bench with five inches of soil will give excellent results. If your bed or bench is all ready you can sow the seeds where they are to remain. If that is not convenient, then sow three little groups of seeds in 3-inch pots. You can afterwards divide into sections without the soil leaving the roots. Mignonette does not at all like the transplanting process. A foot apart is plenty close enough if you want fine spikes. It is well to have two or three little plants till they are an inch or two high, for the green worm may want some of them. This green worm is so exactly the color of the leaves that they are not easily detected till you see the depredations. After a spraying, dust on some hellebore and that will settle the worm.

Pansies.

We have become very well acquainted of late with a large pansy grower who has not a foot of glass and yet in ordinary seasons can ship by the middle of April many thousands of splendid pansies, each plant with two or three flowers. He sows about the middle of July. The seed beds, of finely prepared, light soil, are in the broad sun. The seed is sown in very shallow drills and the surface of the bed is never allowed to become dry or in the slightest degree baked. A cloudy day they may only want watering twice; on a sunny, windy day they may want watering ten times, and they get it. After the little plants are well up, watering is only necessary to keep them growing.

This is not the only way to raise pansies, but it has one advantage, that the plants are not drawn up weak, which they often are if sown in the shade. Sowing so early enables you to have a strong flowering plant before winter sets in and, if not much hurt by winter's frost, you have an early blooming plant, just what is wanted for the spring garden or for vase filling. Some growers lay rye straw between the plants just before freezing up begins, but I shall never believe that anything is so good for winter protection as hemlock boughs, where they are available. There is a bow to these branches and if laid with the bow up, the branches do not lie heavily on the plants.

This old gentleman, whose method we have been watching, does not cover at all and with the exception of such a terror as last winter loses but a small fraction of the plants. Now the above is a good plan to raise early pansies, for which we have most use, yet pansies make a pretty show the entire summer if kept watered and the withered flowers picked off, and for this purpose there is nothing like the plants from seed sown in early February in the greenhouse. They may be small at planting time, but they last, while these older and larger plants soon become exhausted.

Lily of the Valley.

We grew a few hundred lily of the valley every week last summer till the new crop came in. Very large growers have their own cold storage houses, where the roots can be kept at a proper temperature, but we have never found our local cold storage houses to do this faithfully and have lost a good many roots by their being kept too cold. About 28 to 30 degrees is, I believe, the correct temperature. So we got these few hundred weekly from a New York importing house and they were fine and profitable. Five inches of sand in any house where the glass is well shaded is all that is wanted to flower these retarded roots, except one important point; don't let any draught strike them or they will quickly wilt and be ruined.

Lancifolium Lilies.

Lilium lancifolium will soon be giving us bloom and very beautiful and sweet they are, album and rubrum especially, and no one can object to the odor. There is good excuse for people kicking at the use of the gorgeous auratum. Wonderful flower that it is, either outside, in the border or in the conservatory, it is overpowering in a room and about as much out of place in a design as an old fashioned sunflower would be. The lancifolium lilies may grow and flower in the broad sun in bright, fighting Japan, but grown here in pots they like neither our high summer temperature nor bright sun. Keep them in a shaded, cool house and the flowers will be larger and better in every way.

Put on the Paint.

Most roses are planted, it is a few weeks early for carnations and yet there is no rest for the florist. If you have no benches to build, you have houses to paint, either inside or out, or both, and no labor and expense can be better laid out than on a coat of paint. It is a warm job under the glass just now but with a large piece of canvas over the glass, and moved along as you progress, it is quite endurable. The benefits of a coat of paint to the interior of a house are many. Not the least is the satisfaction and thrill of pleasure you get every time you enter the bright, clean house. You get a light house, which is of the greatest benefit to the plants, and you have destroyed countless eggs and spores of your enemies. You have helped to preserve the wood. In fact, you have done a mighty good job and one that you will be thankful for and proud of when finished, and it is not such a great effort after all. We do absolutely necessary labor of ten times the volume with the greatest cheerfulness and perspiration, but shy at painting because you can "get along another season without it." Last year we bought of Benjamin Hammond a barrel of his prepared white paint for greenhouses and found it superior to any lead and linseed oil we could buy and mix ourselves. It left a fine, shiny gloss on the bars. Money laid out in paint is a good investment.

William Scott.

ADIANTUM.

I wish some of the wise ones would tell us how to grow maidenhair ferns successfully. Mr. Scott's remark that "of all greens it is the queen and there is no king" caused me to lay in a supply, but my plants do not at the present writing emphasize the compliment.

E. T.

The best method of growing maidenhair ferns for cutting is to plant them out on a bench, the usual practice being as follows:

Fill a bench with four to six inches of good soil preferably composed of rotten sod or top soil mixed with one-sixth to one-fifth of dry cow manure, the manure being broken up well among the soil. Then take healthy young adiantums from 3-inch pots, or 4-inch if you have them, and plant in the bed about fifteen inches apart, being careful not to bury the crowns of the plants too deeply. Plant firmly and then give a good watering to settle the soil, but do not water the ferns too frequently before they get well started into growth, for when the soil gets soured the ferns never make a good start.

Shade the glass moderately with whitewash or some other preparation that will come off in the fall, for while shading is required now, the growth will be too soft for cutting if grown with too little light in the fall and winter. Ventilate freely both day and night during warm weather, but avoid strong draughts on the plants, and give a little fire heat when the nights grow cold enough to require fire in a rose house, the object being to maintain a temperature of 60 to 62 degrees in the fern house at night, with fresh air in abundance and a reasonably moist atmosphere.

If planted now the adiantums should produce fronds in abundance for winter use, but will require watching in case the house in which they are planted is infested with snails, these pests having a great liking for the young fronds.

Some pulverized camphor sprinkled about among the plants will discourage the snails, or they may be trapped at night by the use of cabbage or lettuce leaves or pieces of various vegetables.

A bed of adiantum that is properly cared for will continue to produce paying crops of fronds for two seasons, after which it is best to replant, the best results being had from young plants, in preference to dividing up the old crowns. When grown for the second year the plants will need a careful trimming out and cleaning through in order to remove all dead fronds and rubbish, after which the surface of the soil may be stirred up gently and a top dressing of new soil given, the latter having a slightly greater proportion of manure than the original compost. But at all times be careful not to use fresh manure about the ferns, there being the possibility of injury to the plants from ammonia in such a case.

W. H. TAPLIN.

MEALY BUG.

We have a new (to us) kind of a pest and would like to know what it is and what to do with it. It is worst on the coleus and came where there were mealy bugs. The mealy bugs are nearly gone, but the new pest is on the increase. When it is small it is about as large as a small common pin head and is dark in the center, edged with white as it grows older. The back end grows longer till it looks like white wings about three-sixteenths of an inch long, but it does not fly. We never saw it until this year and we have shown it to some florists and they never saw it before.

M. G.

We believe that the insect that has succeeded the mealy bug on your coleus is nothing more than the same thing in a slightly different form. The female of this insect is wingless and dies after fulfilling its chief function of life, laying a crop of eggs. The male has wings, is smaller than the female and has less of the cottony covering, he is also not so round in form as the female. It is pretty certain that you have nothing but the mealy bug and if you keep the coleus you will soon have another crop of the genuine.

On all such cheap plants as coleus it will never pay to attempt to clean the plants; burn them and start with a new, clean lot in the fall. On valuable plants, such as palms and dracænas, there are numerous remedies recommended. Washing with soft soap and nicotine is a very old remedy. Gishurst Compound is excellent used in the same way. Washing or even syringing with kerosene emulsion is practiced with success by some growers. All these remedies will effectually clean the individual plant, but it will not clean the house. It is asserted by high authority that hydrocyanic acid gas will kill the full-grown mealy bug and if this is persistently used every two weeks for a few months it will clean your house of mealy bug, red spider, thrips, all kinds of aphides and everything else that breathes through the mouth, and minute as is the red spider, it has a mouth and probosis and breathes. There is really little excuse for mealy bug on palms, dracænas and cycads or any plants that will enjoy a strong force of plain, cold water, for that will keep them down.

Pink Peony, Modele de Perfection.

ASPARAGUS FOR SEED.

Please tell us a few things about growing Asparagus plumosus nanus for seed. Shall I plant my stock in the ground or leave the plants in large pots? What soil should they have? If in the bench or bed how shall I renew the soil and give them fertilizer, and when? Is it the old growth or the new which bears the best seed? Do they need thinning or spraying? What temperature is required in winter when the vines are full of seed?

S. B. R.

Whether the asparagus is grown for cutting or for seed, it is the best plan to plant it out in a deep and well prepared bed of rich soil, for under such conditions it will not be necessary to disturb it for several years, provided proper care be given to its culture. A bed of soil two feet deep, and having a layer of broken bricks or cinders in the bottom for drainage, is not too much for a good asparagus bed, the soil being rotted sod or top soil with about one-fifth of good stable manure mixed in it. This will probably not need more manure during the first season, provided the soil was of good quality to begin with, but after that a top dressing of manure, or manure and soil mixed, may be needed twice a year.

Asparagus does not begin to flower until the plants are strong and the growths are mature, and even then is by no means a sure crop, for there are sometimes only a few growths in a house that will produce seeds. As this asparagus is rather slow in its growth, there is no need of thinning and seldom any cause for spraying, unless the plants are attacked by thrips or red spider, it being understood that this question refers to spraying with insecticides, and not to syringing simply with water; the latter is a very necessary part of the culture during bright weather.

The proper night temperature for Asparagus plumosus during the winter is 65 degrees, and to get the best results the temperature should not vary greatly.

The depth to which the asparagus should be planted depends upon the size of the plants, the old ball being buried to a depth of one to three or more inches, according to whether the plants are from 3-inch, 4-inch, or larger pots.

W. H. TAPLIN.

PEONIES.

There have been a great many peonies introduced since Festiva maxima was distributed to the trade, but there are few indeed which are in any way comparable to it. Festiva maxima was offered by Miellez in 1851, so that it has been in the trade fifty-three years, but as an early white it cannot be beaten. Well established plants carry their blooms sometimes four feet from the ground, and this year, which was a very favorable one for the development of the blooms, gave flowers nine inches in diameter when fully expanded. One of the accompanying illustrations shows a single bloom of Festiva maxima and in the larger illustration, showing a view in the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, the plantation of this variety is easily distinguishable, although in the extreme background in the photograph. At this great distance it can be seen that it holds up its head above the nearer varieties and its profusion of bloom can readily be seen. At the foreground in the picture is a field of iris, one variety of which is particularly worthy of note. It is Madame Chereau. Mr. Peterson's six-year-old son, Norman, is standing beside a row of this variety. The plants were forty inches high when photographed. The flower is pure white, very large, with a frilled margin all around each petal.

Although very many meritorious varieties of peonies have been introduced in recent years and the list of sorts now numbers literally thousands, still Queen Victoria, or the old Whitleyi, stands as one of the best varieties in white. It is one of the popular sorts for the florists, as it is an excellent keeper and a very good shipper. It also keeps well on the plant when used for garden work. The true stock is of strong growth and the flowers are of good size. They open two days after Festiva maxima. The variety Whitleyi was first described in England in 1808. The name Queen Victoria is a more modern appellation.

Modele de Perfection is a pink peony which has been sold for some years at the Peterson Nursery under this name. This is not the same variety which is sold under this name in Europe. Both are pink but the characters are quite different. This variety, however, is worthy of its title. It is of one shade of pink throughout the bloom. It is one of the so-called pineapple centered varieties. The illustration shows the broad guard petals, the center of the expanded bloom being very compact. It is a free bloomer, every stalk running up to a flower bud and on young plants the amount of bloom is noteworthy. Mr. Peterson is of the opinion that this variety is identical with M. Jules Elie, a pink variety sent out by Crousse in 1888, and other experts agree with him. At best the differences in growth are very slight and might easily be accounted for by differences in the strength of the plants from various sources.

One of the Crousse varieties of 1880, which has proved of exceptional merit in this country, is Madam Geissler, very large, late, clear rose color. The plants grow to about thirty-six inches in height and the blooms are seven inches in diameter when fully developed and about five inches deep.

The sale of plants and cut flowers has increased wonderfully in the last few years, the peony enjoying an era of popularity heretofore unknown to this flower. Of course large numbers of plants are moved in the spring, but growers agree that it is very much to be desired that planting be done in the fall and Mr. Peterson recommends that all planting be done in September. He says that plants divided and reset at that time will make one-third more growth the next season than if planted so late that root action does not begin before frost. He thinks this is a great drawback to European importations, as most of them arrive so late that it is impossible to get them started well the same season and it takes two years to find out what they really can do.

Certain complaints about the failure of plants to bloom satisfactorily have led Mr. Peterson to make some experiments which have convinced him that the seed follicles should be removed from the plants after the bloom has passed. Do not let them stay on and wither or it will cut down the amount of bloom the following season. This has been shown by careful tests with plants growing side by side.

PERLE DES JARDINS.

This old favorite, which has been somewhat neglected during the past few years, has seemingly along with its sports, Sunrise and Sunset, begun to find favor with the public again. A few years ago there was no rose growing establishment of any note but planted at least one-fifth of their rose space to this variety and those who could do it well found it a profitable crop. The places where it is now grown in any such quantities are very few, not because it cannot be grown as well, although I am convinced that it has deteriorated in a measure, but because there has been little or no call for that color during the past year or two.

The larger growers finding the market for this color failing, gradually dropped it, while some of the smaller growers still cling to it in a half hearted way and its deterioration, if any, can be ascribed to neglect, both in the care and attention given to it in propagating and growing.

To grow this variety to perfection great care must be exercised in the selection of wood for cuttings, as in the proper choice of wood lies the success or failure to produce plants which while giving a robust, vigorous growth will also attain that firmness of foliage and wood capable of producing large, well developed buds of good color and form and the smallest percentage of bull-heads.

To eliminate this propensity to produce bull-heads the wood selected for propagating should be that close-jointed, firm and well ripened blind wood taken from as near the top of the bush as possible, where it has been exposed to sunlight and air. For years during the time this rose was in favor, I tried the experiment of propagating from flower stems, using from one to three eyes and followed up the practice year after year, as the theory was then highly commended, with the view of getting rid of bull-heads. On carefully comparing the results I found that these plants produced thirty-five per cent more bull-heads than the plants from blind wood cuttings. Where the plants showed a tendency to throw bull-heads I found it a profitable plan to remove the crown bud and use a lateral instead.

The soil that seemed to best suit this class of rose was a stiff, fibrous clay with very little manure added. Manure containing a large proportion of nitrogen seemed to encourage that rankness of growth favorable to the production of bull-heads, whilst bone meal, lime or wood ashes had the effect of producing a firmer texture of foliage and harder wood more suited for the development of perfectly formed flowers of a rich color.

The temperature at which this variety does its best is 62° nights, running to 75° or 80° during bright sunshine. To secure the best results in color and keeping qualities care must be taken not to overfeed, especially with liquid manure during the winter months.

Being of a softer nature than most roses the buds should be cut close, especially if they have to be shipped a distance, and care should be taken to leave at least three fully developed eyes so that a future crop may be assured.

If this color becomes as great a favorite in the future as it has been in the past we may expect some new varieties on the market, as I am informed that there are a few seedlings which in point of merit are away ahead of the Perle, and which are maintaining stable characteristics.

PIPING FOR HOT WATER.

We have an office 12x12 feet; adjoining this is a house 18x48 running east and west; running north and south from this are two houses, one 15x45, the other 16x100. The boiler is under the house next the office, but we are thinking of putting in a new hot water boiler and locating it in a pit at least six feet deep at the south end of the long house, about 130 feet from the office. We shall use 2-inch pipe mostly. In the house 18x48 we want 50 degrees when it is 15 below zero outdoors; in the house 15x45, 55 degrees, and in the house 16x100, 53 degrees. How many linear feet of 1½-inch and 2-inch pipe make a square foot of radiation? Please give the rules for obtaining the amount of radiation which will be required in a house of given dimensions when the temperature needed and the coldest outdoor temperature are stated.

J. W. M.

It is not an easy thing to give the rules for computing the heat requirements for houses with different exposures and situations, which are to be piped with pipe of various sizes. In the first place the piping is based upon the area of the roof and sides of the house which are exposed, the amount of piping depending upon the temperature to be maintained during severe weather. While the area of standard pipe is always the same, the constants for determining the radiation needed differ for the temperature required, depending upon the heat used, whether hot water or steam, as well as upon the pressure. It is therefore, quite impracticable to give all the tables and method by which these factors are determined. The constants used have been worked out by mechanical engineers and by careful experimental tests in the greenhouse.

Without, therefore, endeavoring to explain further the method by which conclusions have been arrived at, I will state that your boiler, which is the keynote of the whole situation, must have a capacity to supply heat for at least 1,250 feet of radiation, or the boiler must have about 160 square feet of heating surface, which means the area of the surfaces exposed to the fire and heated gases.

The Field of Irises and Peonies at Peterson Nursery, Chicago.

The piping will be as follows: House 18x48 feet piped with 1½-inch pipe requires 620 feet and with 2-inch pipe 496 feet. The house 16x100 feet piped with 1½-inch pipe requires 1,154 feet and with 2-inch pipe 923 feet. The house 15x45 feet piped with 1½-inch pipe requires 480 feet and with 2-inch pipe 384 feet. Or ten runs of 2-inch pipe in the house 18x48 feet, nine runs of 2-inch pipe in the house 16x100 feet and nine runs of 2-inch pipe in the house 16x45 feet.

FORCING LILAC IN FRANCE.

M. Jules Veran, a French writer, gives some interesting facts about forcing lilac, as follows:

"The lilacs to be forced are repotted at the end of June or the beginning of July, according as the weather is more or less sunny. Care is taken for the first fortnight to keep the plants in a shady place, where they are constantly kept covered; they must never be allowed to wilt; for this reason they are only repotted early in the morning or in the evening, the pots being plunged up to the rim. Watering is done frequently, and once a week liquid manure well diluted with water is applied. Watering is reduced in amount toward the end of September and the beginning of October, when the leaves begin to fall. At this season the pots are dug up and placed side by side, watering being altogether stopped, so that the plants may enter upon a period of rest, when excess of moisture would cause rotting of the roots within the pot. For this reason the plants are, from November onward, kept under shelter from the autumn rains. This condition, modified according to circumstances, is an important essential for forced lilacs. The plants should also be covered with a deep mulch of dry manure.

"Forcing begins about the middle of November, in order that the flowers may be produced for Christmas or New Year's. The forcing house is divided into three compartments; one is completely covered over to exclude the light, the plants being placed side by side, the stems only being wetted with warm water at a temperature of 28 to 30 degrees Reaumur (say, 95 to 100 degrees Fahr.). In three weeks' time the flowers expand, and it is then necessary to expose them to the light. They are in consequence removed to the second compartment and well watered. After a week the flowers begin to show color, when the plants are removed to the third compartment at a temperature of 15 degrees Reaumur (66 degrees Fahr.), where the flowers assume their normal color.

"This plan demands five or six weeks' longer time than is required when the plants are subjected to complete darkness, but the results are stated to be superior. After New Year's no more plants are placed in the dark, but they are copiously watered. Forcing terminates at the end of April. The shrubs that have not been forced, as well as those from which the flowers have been removed, are cut down and planted in the open air, when in two years' time they are ready to be again potted and subjected to forcing."

DENDROBIUM PHALAENOPSIS.

Apart from their merits as useful plants for house decoration and for cutting purposes generally, the numerous distinct varieties of this beautiful species are among the finest of exhibition plants, especially as the flowers remain fresh on the plants for a very long time, and also when cut. The plants of D. Phalænopsis will soon make numerous young roots from the base of the new growths. Before these have made much progress, any plants that need more root-room should be repotted, when the roots will quickly establish themselves in the fresh compost. Where it is intended to hang the plants up to the roof, small shallow pans are generally preferred; but the ordinary flower-pot with wire handles attached may also be employed. Whichever be used plenty of drainage is necessary. I am using pans for the smallest plants, and providing only a thin layer of fibrous peat and sphagnum moss for them to root into. Larger examples are placed in pots with a compost of peat, leaf soil, and sphagnum moss in equal parts; a little coarse silver sand and a few small crocks are added to the compost during the repotting process. The pots are filled nearly to the brim with soil, and a layer of clean picked moss is packed firmly around the base of the plant. Those plants provided with such a compost will require very careful watering all through the growing season; it is only necessary to keep the surface moss in a fresh growing condition. Those plants in pans with a much smaller amount of compost will require an abundance of water until the flowering season is past. In either case very little water will be needed for several weeks after repotting, but as the new shoots lengthen and roots become more plentiful, the supply must be gradually increased. When in full growth these dendrobiums require an abundance of heat and atmospheric moisture, and should be put in a part of the house which is but slightly shaded.—W. H. White, orchid grower to Sir Trevor Lawrence, in the Gardeners' Chronicle.

COST OF FUEL.

My greenhouse is 18x40, ten feet to ridge, four feet side walls. Use natural gas at 27 cents for fuel and steam as a heating medium. The cost of gas last winter was about $80. Is this as cheap as a good grade of soft coal at $3 a ton? Was the above cost reasonable for maintaining 50 degrees in a house of this size? C. L. W.

With a small greenhouse, such as you have, it is a question if it is not cheaper for you to use the gas at the high price quoted than to attempt to fire with coal at $3 per ton. With gas there is little or no attention demanded in the way of firing, but to maintain a constant steam pressure with steam-coal would require that the boiler be fired at least once in two hours throughout the whole twenty-four hours. It is not so much a question of cost of fuel as of cost of running the plant. I judge that, everything considered, the gas, while more expensive, is more satisfactory, and if it is necessary to hire the firing done, gas will prove cheaper. At 27 cents per 1,000 feet gas is equal to coal at $8.10 per ton. Hard coal might be substituted for the gas by using a self regulating boiler with a slight saving in cost.

Seasonable Work.

Those who have their houses planted and now nicely under way cannot sit down in the shed, thinking that the work is all done and that they might as well cool off, for if one tries this method he will soon find that the weeds, aphis, etc., are making the most of his absence and getting in their "best licks." There is nothing that tends to make good crops more surely, either indoors or out, than good, constant cultivating, and while you cannot use the small hand cultivators in the house, you can use the little five pronged scratchers to good effect in their place, and if done often enough it saves work, as it not only does the cultivating but keeps the weeds down, for they dry out at once as soon as they germinate.

Do not let any aphides, either green or black, get a foothold. If any are seen take the first bright, dry morning you have and dust them with tobacco powder, syringing this off from two to three hours later. Do not trust to one or two applications being permanently effective but keep a constant lookout for these as well as all enemies. Go over the plants often, gathering and burning the yellow leaves and trimming the runners off so as to have nice stocky crowns by the time you are ready to pick flowers. R. E. Shuphelt.

VIOLETS UNDER SASH.

I have two sash houses 150 feet long on which one-half the sash can be opened as ventilators. Can I plant one house with Marie Louise and the other with California violets in July without removing the sash? Should I keep the runners cut off the Californias, the same as with Marie Louise, or let them grow, as if they were planted in the field to be housed in the fall? A. N.

From the description I should suppose that the houses would do very well for violets and, as I take it they are old houses, I would emphasize what I said a few weeks ago about cleaning out, fumigating, painting, liming, etc., so as to have the houses in good shape. They can be planted without removing the sash, but of course you will have to do some shading and give all the ventilation possible. However, as I understand that part of the sash open at the ridge, care will have to be exercised that they be closed during heavy showers to prevent packing down the borders and getting them heavy and in poor condition. We would keep both houses thoroughly cultivated, runners cut off, old leaves picked off, etc. R. E. S.

INDOOR GRAPERIES.

The undersigned, for one, was much interested in the article on "Indoor Graperies" by W. S. Croydon. Like him, I have often wondered that grape growing was not taken up here as a commercial industry. Not in the remotest degree would I attempt to criticize anything that was said in that brief but able review of the subject, but rather to corroborate and encourage some enterprise in a field in which I feel sure there is every promise for a handsome return for the outlay of capital, skill and labor.

The grapes grown under glass in Europe and this country are varieties of Vitis vinifera, native of temperate regions, and yet when the wood is properly ripened it will endure zero weather. Our American grapes are the offspring of Vitis Labrusca and in skin, flesh, texture, flavor and foliage they are widely distinct from what are generally known as exotic grapes. I have heard full grown Americans say they preferred a bunch of Concords to a bunch of Black Hamburg. There is no accounting for taste! We knew a worthy Scotchman who considered a solo by Duncan McLeod, "The Campbells Are Coming," on the bag pipes far superior to Remenyi's rendition of Beethoven's sonata on the violin.

The taste and demand for these exotic grapes is no longer a question. A few years ago we had in our employ the son of a wealthy landowner of Belgium whose father sent to New York during the winter months tons of grapes and, as a box arrived at our house and we helped to eat them, we can vouch for the quality. We were informed that they netted the Belgian grower something like $2 per pound. As there was freight and commission and retailer's profit to be added to this, by the time they were devoured by Reginald Astorbilt they were indeed a luxury. Yet not the slightest bit more an extravagance than American Beauty roses at $24 a dozen.

Twenty-eight years ago we sent to New York City a good many hundred pounds of indoor-grown grapes at the end of July. We received $1.50 per pound for them and in August $1 per pound. In New York, Boston, Chicago or Philadelphia, as well as many smaller cities, where one pound of these delicious grapes could be sold thirty years

Before I invested very largely in graperies it would be well to know the possibilities of California and our late acquisition, Porto Rico, although I think the latter island too tropical for these grapes. A variety of grape comes to us from California in the late summer months. The variety I don't know. It is a red, gristly, oval berry, fine in flavor but always seems to me as if cut before it was ripe. A grape never goes on ripening one hour after it is cut; it must be fully ripe when cut. After all, if California can produce the best of Black Hamburgs and Muscat of Alexandria she would only be in opposition to our home glass-grown products during the short season when the crop was ripe, while we with our glass-protected product could have them earlier and later, for under proper conditions they will hang for months. For instance, in England grapes ripened in September are kept in good condition on the vines till the following March. Perhaps in our winters we could not do that, yet we could easily keep them till Christmas.

Now as to the probable profits of this most pleasant horticultural industry; we can form some idea from the price the grower gets on the other side of the Atlantic. Although I quoted $2 per pound to the Belgian growers, there would be money in grapes in the month of August at one-fourth that figure. From several causes, largely by the appearance of mildew, outdoor grape-growing in Great Britain has for the past half century been almost abandoned and practically all the grapes are produced under glass. While the milder and sunnier climate of France, southern Germany and the still more favorable climates of Italy and Spain, produce these fine grapes without protection, little attention is paid to their cultivation under glass, hence the great skill and art, we must call it, of the British gardener has produced extraordinary results. A single bunch of grapes exhibited at Edinburg some twenty years ago weighed a few ounces over twenty-seven pounds and to prove this was no freak or monstrosity, the second prize bunch was but a few ounces less.

Fifty years ago in the British Isles these hothouse grapes, as they were often called, were as much out of the reach of the moderate income as they are here today, but that is no longer the case. Some forty years ago millions of feet of glass were erected for the cultivation of the grape; all classes went in for grape growing. In crowded cities, where there was a little back yard, as well as in more favorable localities, up went the graperies. In one favored spot on the south coast, Worthing, county of Sussex, with the shelter of the South Downs on the north and English Channel on the south, on a deep, rich loam, acres of graperies were built and, although I am speaking from distant recollections, I feel sure that hundreds of tons of these grapes did not net the grower more than sixpence (12 cents) per pound. Such was the excellence of the soil and salubrity of the climate that we can remember being there one August day as an English volunteer, a sort of Fourth of July soldier, and buying some fine ripe figs at the rate of 50 cents per bushel.

We have any amount of such good land and, as Mr. Croydon remarks, our climate, even in our northern states, is infinitely more favorable from March to December for the cultivation of the grape than is that of Great Britain.

The White Peony, Festiva Maxima.

These remarks are too long already, so I must cut short some points that I intended to comment on. Style of house, soil, inside or outside borders, cultivation, etc., are worthy of a good sized book and it is not quite called for here. Just a word about what once existed here and in many cities of 100,000 or 200,000 about thirty-five or forty years ago. Building a cold grapery was a craze with hundreds who could afford it. Scarcely one now exists. The proprietor thought building the grapery and planting the vines was all there was to it and the coachman or hired man could do the rest. A few years of failure, then disgust, then down came the structure and now grape growing under glass is confined to wealthy men's places, where they keep real, live, professional gardeners, such as Arthur Herrington and Wm. Duckham, who raise splendid grapes.

This luscious and delicious fruit is the most simple to pack and a good traveler and if I were young again and knew what I do now I should not start grape growing north of Maryland or Virginia. Freight to our large cities would cut no figure, but the severe winters and the cost for fuel, either in early forcing or late retarding, would be of great moment, and not only cost of fuel but our terrible winters would be hard to overcome.

In conclusion, there is only one feature of grape culture that is tedious and that is the thinning of the berries. Very cheap help could be taught that. The difference of the labor between England and this country that would enter into the production of these grapes would not be 5 cents per pound and if they were let in free, so much the better, for it would put ginger into us.

In this city on February 1, 1875, I put twenty-four eyes of grape vines in 3-inch pots. All did well and produced grapes, but from the best of the lot on August 1, 1876, or after about nineteen months, from this little bit of wood an inch long I cut twenty-three bunches with a total weight of seventeen pounds. I did something entirely different from the old, orthodox plan or would not have got those results. Goldsmith, when looking on decaying Italy, said:

Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

The best way for us to keep from decay is to grow and produce what the wealthy are willing to indulge in, and grow it good and fine, and not trust too much to "protection." WILLIAM SCOTT.

CUT WORMS AND ANTS.

Please let me know, through the REVIEW, of a remedy for cut worms on cabbage plants, and if any brother florist can tell me how to destroy ants I shall appreciate it. I am greatly troubled with both pests. P. J. K.

As a preventive against cut worms on cabbage plants a liberal dressing of air-slaked lime given to the soil a week or ten days previous to planting is about the best thing I know of. When the plants are once attacked it is hard to get them back into good health, though I have found that watering the healthy plants, after a few began to show signs of the trouble, with a solution of nitrate of soda, using a good teaspoonful to a ten-quart can of water, will prevent further injury. Infested plants should be pulled up and destroyed.

Feed the ants, near their holes, with powdered sugar for a few nights and, when they have got to eating and carrying it away freely, add a little arsenic This will soon put an end to their careers. The advantage of the powdered sugar is that the particles, being small, are easily carried into the holes, where they feed it to their young brood and the queens. Once the latter are destroyed the supply of eggs is cut off, the queen, like the queen bee, being the only female in the hive.

TROUBLE WITH CUCUMBERS.

Enclosed you will find a diseased leaf of a cucumber plant. I still have the sash on. The same brown spots and burnt edge first appeared after the glass had been removed last year. If possible please tell me whether the green lice usually found on cucumbers have anything to do with it, or is it probable that there is something wrong with the soil?

G. H. B.

From the appearance of the leaf sent, I should judge that the trouble is caused by inactivity of the roots, probably due either to unsuitable soil, an over supply of water or insufficient drainage. Cucumbers require plenty of water but sufficient drainage must be provided so that it does not leave the soil soggy. I can find no trace of fungus or other disease; it is a scald pure and simple caused through the failure of the roots to supply the necessary nutriment to support the foliage while subjected to the strong rays of the sun. The green lice mentioned would not in themselves cause the trouble unless the plants were badly infested, but they certainly assist in weakening the plants and some means should be employed to get them cleared out. A few small bundles of tobacco stems laid around the plants in the frame from the time they are planted and renewed occasionally when the strength is spent will be found a good preventive.

MADISON, N. J.

The Thrips Scare.

This town has been coming in for considerable attention of late, on the part of the newspapers, owing to the thrips scare among the rose growers. While it was largely exaggerated, some of the papers even claiming that the industry was ruined, the fact remains that it was bad enough. No one ever remembers seeing anything like it before and we hope never to again. The thrips appeared to find everyone at once and appeared by the millions on the vegetation outside. From there to the inside of the greenhouses was a short step and the thrips soon took it. Most rose men are familiar with this tiny little fellow, so small as to be almost invisible, but the damage a host of them can do to the buds in a rose house is beyond belief.

At this writing the pest is under control again everywhere so far as I hear, and peace once more reigns. A heavy rain or two washed them away outside and a vigorous use of the hose supplemented by fumigation evenings, has pretty well cleared them off inside. The thrips did not by any means confine themselves to Madison. Many other sections report a more or less severe visitation, one correspondent in Massachusetts writing me that he had them around his houses by the million.

Various Notes.

Replanting is now proceeding rapidly in this section. Many growers kept in their roses later than usual in the hope that June, which usually is a good month, would help to make up their losses of the winter. So far this hope has not been realized and it is not to be expected that any but midsummer prices will rule the market from now on. Very few of the new La Detroit are seen. One or two are trying a few Killarney, but the rose growers here prefer to wait until someone else demonstrates the value of a rose before they will take it up, and practically the only roses grown are Beauty, Bride and Maid.

A. H. Folger, representing the James L. Reynolds Fertilizer Company, has been spending a week here gathering up his orders. He reports business as excellent in his line with a great increase over his trade last year.

James Hart has disposed of the remainder of his greenhouse plant to Robert M. Schultz and will in future devote his whole time to his wholesale business in New York. Mr. Hart claims to be the father of the wholesale business and practically all the successful wholesalers in New York had their first tutelage under him. He still retains his residence here. "Bobby" Schultz is one of the best known rose growers in town and is now hustling to get his new place planted and in shape. He is an expert in his own particular line and will be heard from this winter.

Chrysanthemum stock is looking fine in this section. Charles H. Totty reports that he is about cleaned out of young stock of his novelties. He has made shipments to every state in the union. The plants with A. Herrington and W. Duckham are in splendid shape and the usual number of prizes in the mum classes will doubtless come to Madison this fall.

BUFFALO.

The month just closing will long be remembered as an ideal and lovely June and local florists will remember it as being a prosperous time. There have been any number of weddings of the most intense interest to the contracting parties, but few that called for a very elaborate display of the florists' art and materials, still all doing something. It seems to me that we have not had the school commencement business so good for many years, or ever, as this year. Last week was the great time and every day all hands were kept on the jump making up bunches of roses and carnations; still there were flowers enough. At the graduation of the high schools flowers are not allowed to be presented to the lads and lassies. If they were I doubt if there would have been enough to go around.

Outdoor roses have been very useful the past week. Baroness Rothschild, Ulrich Brunner and Magna Charta are lovely if kept watered and disbudded and you get up at 5 a. m. to cut them. The two best carnations we have for this time of year are Ethel Crocker and Prosperity. The benches of these are truly wonderful. There are any amount of poor, mildewed roses coming in and there are also some very good and clean Brides and Bridesmaids. W. J. Palmer, Charles Guenther and Corfu are cutting fine Kaiserin and Carnot. I am glad to say that prices, both wholesale and retail, have not descended to quite as low a mark as that quoted from some cities. The season of the fire cracker is close upon us and then comes the dull two months.

There will be some building this year. W. Legg, who sold his Delaware avenue place last March, has erected two houses eact 20x75 on Delevan avenue close to the entrance to beautiful Forest Lawn. F. L. Poore has just completed a house 20x75 at his Delaware avenue place, also catering to cemetery trade. W. J. Palmer is building a house 30x300 at Lancaster, I think destined for carnations.

C. F. Christensen was so delighted with his spring business, selling out early and clean, that he proposed spending a month on the Aleutian Islands, shooting sea otter, but has finally made up his mind to put the money into two new houses each 19x125.

Very few visitors of late, or they have escaped me. S. S. Skidelsky was here. He tells me has the distribution of John Murchie's splendid white carnation, Fred Burki. This looked to us as fine a white as the Detroit convention could show. As Lawson is one of its parents, it can't be far wrong.

Our most able superintendent of Forest Lawn, George Troup, sailed last week for the "Land of brown heath and shaggy wood, land of the mountain and the flood," land of Burns, and Scott, of Carlyle and a hundred other philosophers, besides warriors and statesmen by the carload. Their blood has furnished the majority of the presidents of the United States. Shakespeare was not a Scotchman, although his ability would warrant the assumption that he did belong to the land of Cakes. Mr. Troup has gone abroad as a single man. Let us pray that he will come back double.

The committee to arrange premiums for the H. A. Meldrum annual fall exhibition (Prof. Cowell, Charles Keitsch and W. S.) met recently and the schedule will soon be mailed to all likely exhibitors. As last year, the amount given in premiums is $1,000 to be paid the night the exhibition closes. We struck out plant classes entirely, as they brought scarcely any competition and little attraction. In classes for cut mums that must be grown and exhibited by the grower only and whose place is within fifty miles of Buffalo, $300 is given. By cutting out the plants this leaves just as much for Adrian and Richmond and I hope this year some others. The classes are few but juicy.

A wedding of exceptional gaiety will take place on East Balcom street, Wednesday, June 29, at 2 p. m. The bride is the beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Warring and the lucky man is Frank Miller. The decoration, mostly field flowers, will be under the direction of Roland Cloudsley, inside decorator for the William Scott Co.; breakfast by Cummings, music by Marcus. Mr. Warring is very familiarly known among the boys as "Old Hoss." We shall be there because we know that Billy will have something up in the corner cool and refreshing with a piece of ice on top.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

Johs. Telkamp, Hillegom, Holland, bulbs; Raynbird & Co., London, England, agricultural seeds; M. Herb, Naples, Italy, bulbs; Hobbies, Ltd., Dereham, England, garden guide.

Rockford, Ill.—Edwin Dempsey & Co. are planning to increase their glass during the summer. A new boiler will be installed. Mr. Dempsey lives in Chicago.

Albany, N. Y.—Newman & Gatz are starting in business with a new range of three houses, one 14x100, one 16x100 and one 20x100 with a show house and office, the material having been bought of the A. Dietsch Co., Chicago.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The market is very dull this week. There is little business and not overmuch good stock. A few specialties, such as Beauties, white roses and valley are chief factors in the limited demand. Sweet peas are awfully plentiful and cheap. Summer flowers of good quality, thanks to the thunder showers, are seen in great variety. There is a little demand for them but it requires careful nursing.

Correction.

A note appeared in this column two weeks ago that "John A. Shellem states he will retire from the business on July 1." This should have read Herman Schoenfeld. It was an unfortunate error for which I trust Mr. Shellem will accept my humble apology.

Various Notes.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving a few fine orchids.

John Westcott entertained a large party of his friends at Waretown, on Barnegat Bay, last Friday. Among the Commodore's guests, most of whom stayed a day or two, enjoying the boating and fishing, were William R. Smith, W. F. Gude and Mr. Loeffler, of Washington, D. C., J. C. Vaughan, of Chicago, John N. May, of Summit, N. J., John Burton, Robert Craig, Robert Kift, Edwin Lonsdale, David Rust and others.

Herbert G. Tull took a party of friends by boat to Riverton last Saturday. The immense Dreer place is fast assuming its Fourth of July, neat as wax appearance.

The Henry F. Michell Co. has just elevated an immense sign measuring 30x36 feet to the roof of the seed store. "Michell's Seeds" can now be seen from the Delaware to City Hall.

H. H. Battles entertained a number of visiting florists at luncheon last Saturday at Boothby's. His guests were William R. Smith, J. C. Vaughan, W. F. Gude, Mr. Loeffler and Samuel S. Pennock.

Rowland C. Hayden enjoyed a three days' fishing trip to Barnegat Bay last week.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. report some fine orders for cycas leaves and wheat sheaves.

William J. Baker is receiving nice lilies of the valley.

Ferdinand Le Gierse, Jr., has taken the place of John Wild, at Swarthmore, Pa.

M. Rice & Co. are making the best use of the lull which precedes the storm by taking account of stock, a necessity in every well conducted business.

E. Nieman, with Robert Crawford, Jr., was married on Monday evening. His brother and family came down from Pottsville for the wedding.

C. F. Edgar & Co. are receiving white petunias and flags from H. H. Battles' Thorn Hedge Farm at Newtown Square and candytufts from Herman Schoenfeld's place at Upper Darby.

C. H. Campbell reports an excellent spring plant business.

William J. Baker has some exceptionally fine Emily Henderson sweet peas.

Godfrey Aschmann has experienced a heavy demand for soft wooded plants this season.

The rose and sweet pea show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held last week under favorable conditions. General interest has increased and better displays are made under the society's banner. Well done Mr. Rust.

The White Peony, Queen Victoria, the old Whitleyi.

Answers to Correspondents.

REVIEW readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia to "Phil," in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses or the Flower Market. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

No. 17. What are the average expenses for labor in greenhouse plants of 50,000 and 10,000 square feet of glass?

The question is a very difficult one to answer, as the expense would vary because of many circumstances in the individual cases. It would undoubtedly be more per square foot for a small plant than for a larger one and would also vary with the different classes of stock grown.

No. 18. Is coke at $3 a ton a more economical fuel than anthracite pea coal at $4 a ton?

I think coke at $3 per ton is somewhat cheaper than pea coal at $4. Pea coal is so much used now for domestic purposes that the price has been advanced in consequence, so that it is almost beyond the reach of florists. The most economical coal for florists is the best grade of soft coal, where there are suitable boilers for burning it. So far as my experience goes, Georges Creek soft coal is the proper article.

No. 19. Is there any injustice to large buyers for a firm which imports bulbs and roots to advertise this stock throughout the season and sell it from cold storage to the small buyers?

Of course it is true that a large quantity of bulbs are now kept in storage, but the purchaser of these cold storage bulbs must pay the cold storage charges and a certain amount of interest for the extended time taken in delivery.

Base Ball.

The return game between teams representing the Flower Market and Robert Craig & Son was played at Wyndmoor last Saturday as announced in the REVIEW last week. Unluckily I had to work and do not know whether a "high sky," a "wizard pitcher, a "home crowd," the fierce heat or Old Nic himself was too much Craig & Sons, but I know there was plenty of sport and that the Flower Market won by the following score:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Craig	1	3	0	4	4	0	0	0	3—15

NORRISTOWN, PA.—John G. Steffen is planning to build a house 30x100 feet for miscellaneous stock.

WEEHAWKEN, N. J.—Halliday & Smith are building a house 28x100 using material from the A. Dietsch Co., Chicago.

NAPERVILLE, ILL.—Jacob Rohr has admitted his son Charles to a partnership and the firm is now Jacob Rohr & Son.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market on Monday was still weak, with no encouraging signs of convalescence. Saturday and Sunday were the hottest June days in New York in thirty years. Nearly 100 degrees was reached in the shade and in the sun man and beast were prostrated. Even June brides could not lift the depression and they have only a few days left to get into the band wagon. Carnations seldom go above $1 for the finest. Roses are a drug. Hardly any demand for anything. One pleasant feature of the week which will break the monotony, is the outing of the club on Wednesday. Everything at this writing indicates a great success. Full particulars with names of winners cannot reach this week's issue. But if every club in the country will display the same enthusiasm as to a summer reunion it would add immensely to the harmony and stability of all such organizations.

Various Notes.

Joseph A. Millang, the Beauty king, celebrated his thirty-fifth birthday June 21. Strange some fair damsel does not take advantage of leap year in this case.

Frank Millang contemplates another trip to his western ranch near Portland, Ore., this summer.

A. J. Fellouris is back from Mars Hill and the Acropolis with his Grecian bride, looking much the better for his European trip.

Mr. Bland, of Girard & Co., florists of Regent street, London, England, is on a visit to America and the World's Fair.

Jos. Fenrich received his first shipment of cut flowers last Thursday, a box of gladioli of excellent quality. He has fitted up his new store very neatly.

John Young has been receiving some fine Beauties, irises, peonies, Liberties, Kaiserins and valley from Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I. He tells me that the corresponding week a year ago was the banner week of June, while this season it was the worst of the year to date.

The engagement is announced of A. C. Scott, of New Rochelle, nephew of Alex McConnell, and one of his force at the Fifth avenue store, to Miss Jennie Reynolds of the same city. The marriage will take place in the early fall. Congratulations are extended.

The father-in-law of James McConnell, of the New York Cut Flower Co., died June 21 after a lingering illness.

Bonnot Bros., of Flemington, N. J., have completed their rebuilding for the season, devoting their large new house entirely to Bride and Bridesmaid roses.

Edward Roehrs, of Rutherford, son of Julius Roehrs, arrived home last Friday after a two and one-half years' stay in France, Belgium and England, where he worked with several of the best horticultural houses.

Julius Roehrs is rebuilding a number of houses as usual and has received large importations of phœnix and other palms, araucarias and orchids, as well as bay trees, his large stock being about depleted. He attributed the exceptional demand this year to the severe weather of the winter, many having to be replaced, and not to any special increase of general appreciation.

Bobbink & Atkins are constantly adding to their nurseries, having now about eighty acres planted with a complete assortment of grand stock. They have a forest of bay trees of all sizes and report an excellent season, with a constantly growing demand.

Wm. Plumb will drink his own health hereafter and that of his fellow members from a solid silver loving cup, the gift of the Brooklyn Horticultural Society, which thus has shown its appreciation of his excellent services as manager of the carnation exhibition of 1903.

Fleischman, Thorley, Thos. Young and Warrendorff generously supplied the cut flowers for the benefit performance at the Grand Opera house in behalf of the sufferers through the Gen. Slocum tragedy.

The sympathy of his many friends is extended to John Nash in the loss of his brother, who was accidentally killed in London, England.

B. Suzuki, of Suzuki & Iida, left last week for Japan and from present indications will hardly reach Yokohama in time to join with his countrymen in celebrating the fall of Port Arthur.

Mansfield is enjoying his annual outing at Saratoga.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Clucas visited the World's Fair last week and the seedsmen's convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Heller, of Heller Bros., New Castle, Ind., were recent visitors.

Among the visitors to New York last week was W. C. Barry, of Rochester. Many nurserymen on their way to the Atlanta convention spent a few hours in the city.

The east side florists have had the most strenuous experience in their history, owing to the great steamboat disaster. It was impossible for many to fill their orders, some having nearly 100 separate floral designs in a day.

Several of the large retail stores have their windows devoted to lily ponds, those of Warrendorff and Small, on Broadway, being especially effective. Many varieties are on exhibition.

The great convention at St. Louis is so near that general interest is evident and prospective visitors are already making arrangements for the journey. Chairman O'Mara announces stop-over privileges at Philadelphia, Washington and Cincinnati, the Baltimore & Ohio railroad having been definitely decided upon as the route and 10 a. m., August 15, as the starting hour from New York. Reservations of berths should be made as early as possible and the committee will also arrange for hotel accommodations if desired. It is hoped the attendance of last year will be greatly increased. Every arrangement for an enjoyable trip and the fraternizing of the brethren enroute is being provided.

J. F. Sullivan, of Detroit, who has been visiting his parents at West Grove, Pa., and dallying with the surf at Atlantic City, is spending a few days with his brothers and friends in New York City, visiting the growers, reveling in the splendors of Coney Island and enjoying the outing of the New York Florists' Club. He is expected to make the overfed New Yorkers hustle in the fat men's race.

Lager & Hurrell, of Summit, N. J., report an exceptionally busy season, large quantities of orchids arriving and going out every day. One order this week required forty-five cases. The demand is rapidly increasing and comes from every part of the country.

Bowling.

"It's getting too hot to bowl," seems to be the refrain these summer evenings. Following are the scores made on Tuesday evening of last week:

Siebrecht	172	136	156
Sorby	137	128	152
O'Mara	176	168	143

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The trade has settled down to the summer basis, the only difference being that considerably more than the ordinary quantity of stock is coming in. Receipts continue almost as heavy as in early June, replanting operations not being apparent in the quantity of stock in the market. Beauties of satisfactory quality are the one item that is in short supply. The quality of these has been on the down grade for some time and they are now but little better in this respect than the Brides and Maids. It would seem that the growers of the great quantities of very badly mildewed tea roses which are seen would make haste to get the houses replanted, but such does not seem to be the case. There are some very fine Kaiserins coming in, which sell as high as $8 per 100, but by far the greater part of the receipts of roses are jobbed off by the box.

Those who thought there was a decrease in the carnation cut in sight have found themselves mistaken. Receipts are frequently 25,000 blooms a day in several of the commission houses and there is no market for such quantities. When the stock is a day old it is almost impossible to sell it at any price, the Greeks refusing anything but fresh stock of pretty fair grade at 5 cents a bunch. There are still considerable quantities of lilies, but many of them are now auratum. If one wishes peonies he will have no trouble in finding whatever quantity he may need. Prices are as variable as the quality, but most of them value low. The receipts from the growers have practically ceased, but there are large quantities still in cold storage. The outdoor sweet peas have come in the last week and countless thousands are seen in the commission houses. Lily of the valley continues in fair demand, but feverfew and other small stock of that character is not wanted, except for window display. The indoor gladioli are nearly gone. Asparagus continues very scarce, but other greens are plentiful.

Beginning July 1 the wholesale houses will close at 5 p. m. daily. July 4 they will close at noon. Buyers should bear this in mind.

Various Notes.

Peter Jensen, of 890 W. North avenue, was in the market as usual Sunday morning and within a few moments of his return home fell dead of heart disease. He was 33 years old and was doing a fairly prosperous retail business with the assistance of his wife. They had no children. Mr. Jensen was formerly a rose grower for J. A. Budlong, by whom he was held in high esteem. The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon and many in the trade sent floral pieces.

It is stated that George A. Kuhl and J. S. Wilson, who bought the Albert Fuchs plant on June 15, just prior to the advertised auction, have withdrawn from the deal prior to the completion of the transfer. Mr. Fuchs states that he is again the sole owner of the establishment and that he will at once proceed with the auction as originally contemplated.

Vice-president P. J. Foley presided at the Florists' Club meeting June 23. The principal business of the evening was the auditing of bills and the election to membership of H. E. Philpott, of Winnepeg, Manitoba. The new by-laws will come up for adoption at the next meeting.

On the night of June 23 there were two fires at short intervals in the building occupied by the A. L. Randall Co. The structure and contents were damaged to the extent of $15,000 but the Randall Company's loss, from water, was only a few dollars. A. L. Randall is at his farm in Michigan for the summer.

W. L. Palinsky says that this has been the best spring season in the last ten years. He has sold out of everything at good prices. Mr. Palinsky grows probably the greatest variety of bedding stock of any one in this vicinity.

L. H. Winterson and Miss Steen were married yesterday afternoon and are now in Wisconsin on their wedding trip.

E. Asmus says this has been a very fine season in the bedding plant trade, all stock selling out clean. Last year there was considerable left but this year has seen everything moving out at good prices, although supplies were in the beginning considerably larger than usual.

J. B. Deamud says he put a carload of peonies in cold storage on Monday.

L. Coatsworth is at New Castle superintending some changes in the Benthey-Coatsworth establishment there.

A. Dietsch has returned from a four months' trip through the south and he is again enjoying comparatively good health.

It is announced that John G. Lambros and Miss Lily White will be married at the Greek church July 3. N. Chronis and Mrs. Theo. Kalous will be best man and bridesmaid.

Visitors: E. H. Trader, Uniontown, Pa.; Albert Hey and wife, Springfield, Ill.; Chas. Rohr, Naperville, Ill.; Joseph Hudspeth and Mrs. Hudspeth, Boonville, Ind., the former having been a delegate to the republican national convention.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The business holds up well and the general summer depression is not yet felt. The past week practically ended the social season. There was a great deal more work for school exercises this year than last and we hope for the revival of olden times, when the month of June was classed as one of the best months in the year. From now on there is nothing much looked for unless there are receptions and decorations at the World's Fair, and funeral work, which was somewhat slow the past week. Replanting has begun at some places and others will soon follow. This, of course, will make stock scarce for some time.

As to stock at the wholesale houses, there is plenty of almost everything, though most of it is of poor quality. In sweet peas the market is glutted with all varieties; the bulk of them are of very fine quality. The fakirs sell them two bunches for 5 cents. It hardly pays the growers to pick and bunch them at 50 and 75 cents per 1,000. The hot weather is beginning to tell on the roses and fancy stock is somewhat scarce, with plenty of the second grades in the market for all demands at prices which range from $3 to $6 per 100. Beauties are in good demand, though somewhat off color. Large white carnations are difficult to obtain. A few of the best bring $2; plenty of pink, with reds very small. Candidum lilies are about over. Peonies are still to be had, though slow sale. Gladioli, candytuft, hollyhocks and other outdoor flowers are plentiful. Smilax, asparagus and other greens are plentiful at their usual prices.

Special Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club held a special meeting last Thursday afternoon to talk over convention arrangements. This meeting was held at the residence of our treasurer, Otto G. Koenig. The meeting opened promptly at 2 o'clock, with thirty-one members present. The finance committee reported plenty of funds on hand and all members working faithfully. Messrs. Ammann, Ellis, Beyer, Tesson, Weber and Beneke reported that arrangements were almost complete as to the work of their committees. Supt. Kuehn, of the trade display, says that applications for space are coming in every day and that arrangements in the display room are nearly all complete. The following arrangements were made as to program for entertainment during the convention: Tuesday night at 7:30, president's reception; Wednesday morning at 9 a. m., ladies's bowling contest; afternoon at 2 p. m., bowling tournament of the National Florists' Bowling Association in teams of five, and individual contest. During the time of the bowling tournament the ladies will be taken for an outing by the ladies' reception committee, of which F. C. Weber is chairman. Thursday afternoon at 2 p. m. the shooting contest will take place; on Friday afternoon a reception and outing at Shaw's Botanic Garden, to which every member of the S. A. F. is invited.

The meeting then adjourned to inspect Mr. Koenig's well kept place, after which the members were taken for a drive through beautiful Bellefontaine cemetery, which was much enjoyed. On our return, Mrs. Koenig, assisted by Mr. Koenig's sisters, had prepared a fine repast on the lawn in front of the residence, at which everything one's heart desired was spread on the tables. After lunch speechmaking was in order, and the president called on different members for short talks. Among those who responded were: J. F. Ammann, J. W. Dunford, Otto Koenig, E. W. Guy, Emil Schray, C. A. Juengel and W. J. Pilcher. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. and Mrs. Koenig for the great treat given the members and the afternoon will long be remembered by those who attended.

"I received a great many orders from the advertisement in the Review; it has proved to me that it pays to advertise in the Review and I shall use it whenever I have stock to sell."

R. D. KIMBALL.

Waban, Mass.
June 24, 1904.

Various Notes.

The various Florists' Bowling Clubs, through their captains, should correspond with Carl Beyer, chairman of the bowling committee, at 3619 S. Grand avenue, at once and make their entries for the tournament in August, so that all arrangements can be made ahead. The gun clubs should write to R. F. Tesson, Clayton, Mo., regarding the shooting contest. All who have not yet applied for space in the trade display should do so at once, as this will be the banner meeting of the society during the World's Fair year. Mr. Kuehn should be addressed, 1122 Pine street. Last call has been issued by Mr. Beneke for advertisements for the souvenir book. Those who have failed to send in their advertisements should do so at once.

On Saturday morning we had a call from Phil Hauswirth and George Asmus, of Chicago. Both were here to attend the big bowling meeting on Sunday afternoon. They spent most of the day on Saturday inspecting the Pike at the World's Fair. They returned home Sunday night much pleased with their trip, saying that the Chicago delegation to the convention will be the largest yet.

Nick and John Himmer, of Meramec Highlands, have made application for membership to the Florists' Club. They are building a fine range of new houses at their place, which will be completed by August 1.

C. Young & Sons Co. is making a fine show in the windows of cut gladioli, blooming begonias and decorative plants.

The Ellison Floral Co. had a busy week with reception work and late weddings, with orders ahead for this week.

Messrs. Ayers, George Waldbart, Fred Weber, Theo. Miller and the rest of the west end florists all report business keeping up better than expected for the end of June.

Bowling.

The lady bowlers had a meeting on Monday afternoon at which the following scores were made:

Player.	1st	2d	3d	T'l
Mrs. Carl Beyer	122	85	139	346
Mrs. Theo. Miller	96	136	109	341

The Market.

The market during the past week was largely supported by numerous orders for school graduations, roses, carnations, lily of the valley and sweet peas being in the best demand and prices on these have ruled firm and higher for good stock. A good deal of poor quality stock is now coming in, especially of roses and carnations, which nets the grower very little and might almost as well be left at home. Peonies are now over, the hot weather finishing them, shade temperatures within the week running as high as 95 degrees. Outdoor hybrid roses are already on the wane, but sweet peas are piling up in large numbers and will soon be a glut. A few Lilium candidum, outdoor grown, appeared this week. Spikes were not particularly good. With the close of schools and lack of social events we may now expect a weak and overloaded market. Shipping trade to shore resorts has started and will prove something of a factor for the next three months. Several growers now bring in good lots of Kaiserin and Golden Gate, grown expressly for summer bloom. These sell fairly well, the best fetching $5 to $6. Some growers are now pulling out their carnations, intending to replant with field stock as early as possible. This will tend to restrict the output of these, although it may be said that good stock sold easily last week at $2 to $3, while poor samples were almost given away. This only proves a well known and oft repeated statement that good stock will always sell.

Club Meeting.

There was a large attendance at the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on June 21, the date occurring on the opening day of the rose and strawberry exhibition, which attracted many members of the craft. Through the unavoidable absence of J. W. Manning, the essayist of the evening, the club discussed a variety of timely topics, all of which proved very interesting.

President Pettigrew started the ball rolling by calling on John K. M. L. Farquhar to say a few words on Japan. Mr. Farquhar did so in a very entertaining manner. He stated that he believes there are a number of new lilies in the Japanese islands still unknown to us, and other floral treasures. From his experience in Japan he knows that Lilium longiflorum could be ripened in the south of Japan early in July and believes we will eventually depend on that country for our main supplies. He spoke of the beautiful peonies to be seen there and stated that he had seen several nelumbiums which are not yet found in cultivation here. Speaking of the present struggle between Russia and Japan, Mr. Farquhar said his sympathies were entirely with Japan and he thought it would be best for humanity for her to win, a sentiment which seemed to find general acceptance in the meeting.

Some discussions arose over the Richardson seedling peonies, which it transpired were named during John Richardson's lifetime by his friend, John Hovey. The major portion of his noted collection passed into the hands of Dr. R. T. Jackson, who will be asked to speak on Richardson at a future club meeting. A strong point in favor of these seedlings is that in the main they are late blooming and sweet scented. His first seedling was certificated as far back as 1869. W. J. Stewart and Julius Heurlein spoke of the New York peony show. Mr. Stewart commended the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for its effective exhibition arrangements. Messrs. Beard and T. J. Grey were heard from; the former discussed hybridization, while the latter, in his usual inimitable way, gave some original selections.

Duncan Finlayson thought the club should have an outing during the hot months and suggested an ocean sail and clam bake as about the right thing. The matter seemed to find general favor and was referred to the executive committee. Refreshments were passed around after the regular business and brought to a close a very pleasant gathering. No meetings will be held during July and August. The club is now prospering as never before in its history and a large influx of new members is expected when the fall season opens.

Rose and Strawberry Show.

The verdict was that the June exhibition had never been surpassed, either in quantity, quality or general arrangement. Certainly the exhibition was a revelation to those who imagined that roses and other flowers would be poorly shown. So numerous were the exhibits that the facilities were all in use and one member of the committee very generously gave up a large number of vases he had staged containing roses to accommodate late comers from a distance.

The largest individual exhibitor of roses was Miss S. B. Fay, whose gardener, M. H. Walsh, showed close to 1,000 blooms, being the largest prize winner. Other large and successful exhibitors were Mrs. O. S. Paige, J. H. White, W. J. Clemson, E. L. Lewis, Dr. C. G. Weld, Mrs. E. M. Gill, Mrs. E. A. Wilkie, Miss H. B. Foote, Mrs. Day Chadwick, E. A. Clark, Peter Cairns, A. F. Estabrook, W. Whitman, Walter Hunnewell and others. The keenest competition occurred in the class for 100 bottles of roses, the prizes going to Miss Fay, Mrs. Gill, Dr. Weld, Peter Cairns and Walter Hunnewell in order named. For Miss Fay's special prizes for amateurs there were numerous entries, some beautiful lots being staged. Mrs. O. S. Paige, Mrs. E. A. Wilkie and Mrs. Day Chadwick were successful. Some of the best hybrid perpetuals shown were Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Ulrich Brunner, Jacqueminot, Baron de Bonstettin, Victor Verdier, Clio, Margaret Dickson, J. S. Fay, Mrs. John Laing, Paul Neyron, Baroness Rothschild, John Hippa, Magna Charta and Senateur Vaisse.

A very attractive exhibit of hybrid teas from Miss H. R. Foote, of Marblehead, in forty-five varieties attracted much attention and was awarded a bronze medal. This lady grows 350 varieties of roses and has remarkable success with H. T.'s outdoors. Some of her best varieties, many of them new, were Bessie Brown, Grand Duchess, Victoria, Pauline Bersey, General Scheblakine, Frau Peter Lambert, Gladys Harkness, Admiral Dewey, Grace Darling, Mme. Ravary, Marquise Litta, Mrs. B. R. Cant, Alice Gray and Beryl. The Arnold Arboretum showed seventy distinct species of roses, many being very charming. Mr. Dawson also showed a collection of his own seedlings. Of these Minnie Dawson (R. multiflora x alba) with double white flowers, of multiflora habit, received a certificate of merit. Honorable mention was given to a large double pink variety (Wichuraiana x Triomphe de Luxembourg). A very rich colored single variety previously certificated was R. rugosa x General Jacqueminot. The winning new rose was M. H. Walsh's beautiful crimson, J. S. Fay.

There was a remarkable display of peonies, the finest ever seen in Boston and far outclassing that held in New York both in numbers and quality. For display of not less than thirty named doubles competition was keen, T. C. Thurlow winning, followed by A. H. Fewkes, the Means estate and Geo. Hollis. Other large contributors of peonies were E. J. Shaylor, who showed many superb sorts; R. & J. Farquhar & Co., who showed many Richardson seedlings; Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Dr. C. G. Weld, A. F. Estabrook, Mrs. E. M. Gill and others. The quality of blooms was very high and the interest taken in these flowers appeared to be even greater than in the roses, judging by the crowds which gathered around them.

The following varieties received awards from the committee: Mary Louise Hollis, certificate of merit, daybreak pink color; No. 732, beautiful double rose; No. 279, white, delicately suffused with pink; No. 181, pink, broad petals, great substance; moonlight, double deep pink; No. 491 rose color, a fine Japanese imperial variety; No. 986, double white, suffused with shrimp pink. All the foregoing received honorable mention, A beautiful Japanese imperial variety with guard petals, delicate pink and yellow center received a certificate of merit. George Hollis showed all the foregoing and many other good seedlings. E. J. Shaylor received certificates of merit for those two grand varieties, Marguerite Girard, delicate flesh, and Mme. Emile Lemoine, white, flushed carmine. Avalanche, a fine white from A. H. Fewkes, received a similar award.

Dr. R. T. Jackson had some gems. Walter Faxon, rosy pink, and John Richardson, rosy flesh, the latter flowered after Mr. Richardson's death, received certificates of merit. Samuel Henshaw, in the same collection, was the recipient of the highest award, a silver medal. This is a magnificent variety, stems of wonderful strength, flower of immense size, in form like a Mayflower chrysanthemum, color beautiful light, rosy pink, tinged with white. A few of the finest other peonies noted which will be of value to commercial growers were Mme. Geissler, Baroness Schroeder, Mme. Lemoine, Eugene Verdier, Mons. Chevreuil, Mme. Crousse, Lady Isadore, Mme. Chaumy, Golden Harvest, that grand old sort Festiva maxima, Jules Elie, Myrtle, Venus, Mme. de Verneville, Pierre Duchatre, Milton Hill and Amabilis grandiflora.

There were extensive displays of hardy perennials from several exhibitors. Julius Heurlein showel 100 varieties. Harvard Botanic Gardens showed 150 varieties of perennials and grasses. Mr. Cameron also showed a large tank of aquatics, including fine specimens of nymphæas and other choice species. F. J. Rea, W. Heustis & Son, C. W. Parker, W. Hunnewell, Mrs. J. B. Lawrence and others showed perennials.

Peter Fisher showed large vases of Nelson Fisher, Mrs. Patten and Enchantress carnations. Patten & Son showed Mrs. Patten. All were of fine quality for so late in the season. There were large displays of sweet williams and other seasonable flowers. E. A. Clark had a large stand of finely grown gloxinias mixed with adiantum. Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener, had a circular group of palms, gloxinias, orchids, etc. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had numerous palms and ferns. J. S. Bailey, J. Nylan, gardener, put up a superb group of palms in the center of the large hall which was greatly admired. It contained seventy-five plants in forty-six varieties, including many new and scarce sorts.

Vegetables made a fine show, while strawberries were unusually good. Marshall was once more easily the champion variety, followed by Sample, Glen Mary, Nich Ohmer, Minute Man and Belmont. From Miss E. J. Clark, John Ash, gardener, came a group of pot-grown fruit trees, including peaches, nectarines, plums, apples and pears, which received a silver gilt medal. The same exhibitor showed very fine bunches of Diamond Jubilee and Black Hamburg grapes and peaches.

Various Notes.

The agitation for a new independent cut flower market appears to drag and it is doubtful if the new movement will materialize, or if it materializes if it will be a success. A number of the aggrieved members are said to owe rent and premiums to the present market and their absence would not be mourned.

McMulkin, Doyle and Galvin have had some large wedding decorations during June. Trinity church was finely decorated by McMulkin on June 18.

S. J. Goddard has both of his new houses planted with mums and carnations and will be strongly in evidence in the market another fall. He is growing many of his carnations indoors.

W. Cooper has left the employ of W. L. Lewis, of Marlboro, and entered with the Worcester Conservatories. He was connected with the Marlboro establishment for a number of years.

Carnations are making a fine growth in the fields, the warm days and cool nights seeming to suit them. An increasing number are trying indoor culture this season.

The Boston Floral Emblem Society will distribute bouquets and potted plants to the poor children of the city on July 4. A tent will be erected on Boston Common and 5,000 tickets issued through the police, missions and schools. The cooperation of florists and owners of private estates is invited. Flowers should be addressed to either the north or south stations for Boston Floral Emblem Society, in care of the Armstrong Transfer Company.

W. D. Hinds, of Townsend, Mass., who died on June 21, in his sixty-first year, was one of the most successful fruit growers in our state. He received on two occasions the first prize offered by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for the best fruit garden and took numerous prizes at the regular exhibitions. His peach orchard was probably the best in Massachusetts.

McMulkin received the contract for 4,000 bouquets for the children's festival in Mechanic's building on June 25.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia ; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be he d on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE onion set crop still suffers from lack of rain.

PRESIDENT BRUGERHOFF was missed from the meeting of Wholesale Seedsmen's League.

THE government crop report shows good growth in the corn belt, with the crop practically insured.

REPORTS from the Pacific coast pea growing sections indicate that a good crop will be harvested there.

THE beans for seed crop of 1904 are all planted and nice rains have been reported from the Michigan districts.

CALIFORNIA reports that the spinach seed crop there is being harvested and that it will be ready to ship about July 1.

VISITING NEW YORK.—Lester L. Morse, of C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., with Mrs. Morse, en route to Europe.

THE early pea crops are ready for inspection and the later varieties will be ready by the time the earlies have been gone over.

J. W. RATEKIN is now the sole owner of the seed business conducted under the name of J. R. Ratekin & Son, Shenandoah, Ia.

THE A. J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, has prepared for the approaching season by leasing a new warehouse with nearly an acre of floor space.

J. H. HALE has a very interesting and valuable article in Country Life for July on the canteloupe industry in the south and west, now grown to huge proportions. The article is freely illustrated.

SINCE Easter lilies have been so abundant in all the principal cut flower markets of this country and England there has been considerable waste, it being impossible to clear at any price.

THE general opinion of the members in attendance at the convention was that the papers read were the best in the history of the association, but that the lack of discussion after the readings was a matter to be deplored.

THE men best able to give out practical information at seedsmen's conventions are usually the ones who are least heard from on the floor. This should not be; it is not necessary to be an orator to be interesting. What we need is to hear more from the fellows who are poor talkers.

ONE badge of the Seed Trade Association was honored for the admission of two seedsmen to the reception given by the Governor of Missouri to the visiting delegates of the republican national convention. New England inquisitiveness was responsible for the desire to investigate, and Chicago nerve with the Seed Trade badge did the rest.

SEED TRADE CONVENTION.

The St. Louis convention of the American Seed Trade Association last week was one of the most successful on record; it was the twenty-second and few have been more largely attended. The published program was followed in detail. There was a tendency to brevity in discussion but the subjects of the several papers read were more than ordinarily timely, notably the one on the contract system, by Mr. Vaughan, and on insurance, by Mr. McCullough. Technical papers were read by W. W. Tracy, Sr., and George T. Moore, of the United States Department of Agriculture, and by G. H. Maxwell, the irrigation expert, whose work was endorsed. Other papers were by E. D. Darlington, E. F. Bogardus, Mel L. Webster, F. H. Funk and H. M. Schisler. All these will be published in full in the society's "Proceedings" and will there receive their most careful consideration.

Officers were elected as follows: President, C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia.; first vice-president, L. L. May, St. Paul; secone vice-president, W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, Mich.; secretary and treasurer, C. E. Kendel, Cleveland; assistant secretary, F. H. Funk, Bloomington, Ill.; executive committee, S. F. Willard, L. L. Morse, A. H. Goodwin, G. B. McVay, J. G. Peppard; membership committee, Albert McCullough, W. L. Woodruff, A. J. Brown. The meeting in 1905 will be held on the St. Lawrence.

New members admitted at this meeting were: D. Landreth Seed Co., Bristol, Pa.; W. S. Galbraith, Indianapolis; W. H. Maule, Philadelphia; Crenshaw Bros., Tampa, Fla.; W. T. Phillips Co., Toledo; Clucas & Boddington Co., New York; Henry Fish, Carpenteria, Cal.; St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis.

The local hospitalities included trips to Shaw's Garden, the Fair, a brewery and a publishing office.

Retiring President S. F. Willard received a silver pitcher as a souvenir, presented by J. E. Northrup in behalf of the members.

The papers were exceptional, some of them notable, and many expressed regrets that more time could not be given to their discussion. The paper by George H. Maxwell was so interesting and practical that a special edition of 5,000 copies was ordered printed for the use of the members. The papers by Prof. Tracy, Dr. Moore and F. H. Funk are worth a careful study, and Mr. Vaughan's, Mr. McCullough's and Mr. Darlington's papers contain much food for thought for seedmen. Mr. Webster's and the paper by Mr. Bogardus were revelations to us eastern seedsmen who have not yet got accustomed to looking westward for seeds.

The sessions were held during the forenoon only, to allow the members the opportunity of visiting the great World's Fair, an opportunity which each embraced to the utmost. Thursday afternoon the St. Louis seedsmen had three trolley cars at the hotel, which the visiting seedsmen filled to overflowing, for a ride about the city, a visit to one of the large breweries and refreshments at the Missouri Botanic Garden, where the members enjoyed the beautiful lawns and flowers and the grateful shade of the fine trees in this most beautiful spot.

The consensus of opinion was that the twenty-second convention was the best ever held. The choice of the next meeting place lay between Atlanta and some point on the St. Lawrence. This is to be decided by the executive committee at its meeting in January.

C. E. KENDEL.

The new president of the American Seed Trade Association is a son of General C. W. Page, and was born at Clyde, Ohio, May 29, 1860. He removed with his parents to Omaha, Neb., in 1868, and after his father's death removed to Des Moines in 1876. He was employed during the spring of 1877 in the seed store of S. L. Fuller & Co. and has remained with the same firm and its successors, C. W. Door & Co., and the Iowa Seed Co., ever since. In 1886 he organized the Iowa Seed Co., and has since that date been its manager. Although he never had the privilege of attending college, he has been actively identified with educational interests, both as a director in the city schools and as a trustee and member of the executive committee of the Des Moines College. His experience of twenty-seven years in the same seed store is certainly an unusual one and his active participation in the affairs of the seed trade have earned the recognition accorded at St. Louis.

THE SEED TRADE.

F. A. Forbes, of Plymouth, Ind., writes: "Our seed business, though late, has been quite satisfactory. Have had a nice trade in vegetable and bedding plants, which though only taken up in the last two years has grown to be quite an important part of our business. Not having facilities for growing our own stock, the buying has in some cases proved more of a problem with us than the selling. The advertising columns of the REVIEW have been quite a help to us in finding the stock we wanted."

WE esteem the REVIEW very highly for its Seed Trade news.—BINGHAMTON SEED CO., Binghamton, N. Y.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The late, backward spring so retarded planting out that it was not until about ten days previous to Decoration day that business was in full swing and then it was pushed with a vigor that is only now beginning to show signs of diminishing. It was a season in which it was no trick to get orders, the trouble being to get them properly and promptly filled. At Decoration day the shipping demand for cut flowers was double the extra heavy supply that existed and many an order had to go out short. Little towns that in previous years needed only 100 to 200 carnations in addition to the roses, called for 1,000 each and later wanted more. One noticeable feature in the retail department was that there was less complaint, in fact hardly any, at the price charged for plants and cut flowers. The greenhouses are now cleared out of all salable stock. There cannot be found 100 plants of S. A. Nutt, even not in bloom. Late propagated stock out of 3-inch pots, and old plants that have been under the benches all winter, are now being used for filling, etc. Now that business is beginning to slack up a little, attention is being given to replanting and by the end of the week this will be under full headway.

Wm. Cunningham is having trouble with his water supply and is installing a gasoline engine, so he will not be altogether dependent on the wind for filling his tank.

Eli Cross has a large chrysanthemum house ready for the glass.

Henry Smith will build several more houses for cut flowers.

Crabb & Hunter will erect an addition to their office 16x40 feet running to Madison avenue. It will be fitted up with all modern improvements.

Rain is much needed as carnations and other field crops are beginning to suffer.

G. F. C.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business the past week was very disappointing. It was considerably behind last year, but we have to console ourselves with the fact that this falling off of trade is is not confined to the florists alone but nearly every other business is suffering likewise. Never before have I seen such a glut of carnations during this month. During May we always expect such a state of affairs but June usually finds the supply somewhat limited and in most cases scarcely up to the demand. Carnations, and all were of extraordinarily good quality, were sold at whatever the buyer cared to offer and thousands found their way to the dump. Sweet peas were almost as bad and $1 per thousand and less were common selling figures. Roses were scarce, Beauties especially so, and the quality was especially bad.

Things look much better this week, though, and prospects are that the oversupply of carnations is a thing of the past. Prices are much better and there are enough orders booked in advance to make it certain that there will be a good demand all through this week.

Various Notes.

The annual election of officers of the Florists' Society was held Thursday evening and the following members were chosen to constitute the board of governors for the ensuing year: Geo. Murphy, Gus Adrian, Ben George, D. Rusconi and Wm. Rodgers. They will meet during the present week and choose their officers. The entertainment furnished by the society was first-class in every respect and was highly appreciated by all those present.

The S. A. F. convention at St. Louis is now being talked of and I would not be surprised to see a large representation of the Cincinnati craft present. The fact, too, that most all of the eastern delegations will pass through this city has also served to stir up interest.

C. J. OHMER.

BUTTE, MONT.

Butte has had some changes in the florist business recently. The Butte Floral Co. has bought out the business of Law Bros. and will continue their store as the Rosary. The Law greenhouses will be used for the potted plants. The Butte Company's plant at Gregson will be devoted to roses. Robt. Miller, from Natick, Mass., will have charge of the Gregson plant and G. Seitz will be in charge of the plant at Butte. O. A. C. Oehmler is at the Butte Floral Co. store and A. C. Wilhelm at the Rosary.

The State Nursery Co. is pushing carnations at its Butte store, offering them as low as 25 cents per dozen the past week, the other stores selling them for 75 cents and $1 per dozen.

We had a heavy snow storm June 22 and flurries all through the day. It was down to 32 degrees at 8 a. m. and overcoats and furs are worn here.

Stock here is very good and the cut equal to the demand.

The Butte Floral Co. lost several boxes of cut stock on the recent hold-up on the Northern Pacific. They fared the same when the train was held up a year ago.

The Florists' Club will elect officers at the next meeting.

Mr. Law is in Spokane, Wash., looking for an opening. He may locate there.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

NURSERYMEN'S CONVENTION.

The American Association of Nurserymen held its twenty-ninth annual meeting at Atlanta, Ga., last week. The attendance was very satisfactory, although not up to the record of recent years, the distance from recognized nursery centers probably accounting for the falling off. There was, however, an attendance of many who are not usually present, and it is felt to be well worth while to carry the flag into new fields.

C. L. Watrous occupied the chair, owing to the absence of both President N. W. Hale and Vice-President Frank A. Weber. The prearranged program of papers and discussions was not followed because of the absence of a number of those to whom topics had been assigned. But it is never the regular program of the meetings which supplies the incentive for attendance at the conventions of this association, however attractive the programs may be. Business counts for more than anything else with the nurserymen.

The president's address suggested several matters for consideration, among them increasing the dues to provide funds for the prosecution of such work as securing uniform inspection laws, freight rates and classifications on nursery stock and the abolition of the unwarranted licenses now imposed on nurserymen in certain states. The insurance committee reported a plan for mutual insurance. The committee on legislation reported lack of progress on a national inspection law. An advance in freights was reported by the committee on transportation. Committees were appointed to attend meetings of traffic officials and plead the cause of the nurserymen.

Interesting papers were read by G. L. Taber, Glen St. Mary, Fla.; H. T. Jones, Elizabeth, N. J.; H. P. Kelsey, Boston; Prof. Newell, state entomologist of Georgia; J. H. Hale, of Georgia and Connecticut; J. H. McFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa.; J. C. Chase, New Hampshire; C. T. Smith, Concord, Ga.; G. H. Powell, Washington; Prof. John Craig, of Cornell, and others.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; vice-president, C. L. Watrous, Des Moines, Ia.; secretary, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; treasurer, C. L. Yates, Rochester. One vice-president for each state was appointed as usual. It was voted to meet next year at West Baden, Ind.

The several protective associations held their annual meetings during the convention. Each reported a prosperous year and officers were re-elected.

The local hospitalities consisted of an old-fashioned barbacue, and on Friday morning the nurserymen were taken on a special train for a visit to the peach orchards of Berckmans Bros., J. H. Hale and others in the vicinity of Mayfield and Ft. Valley.

THE popular old Wilson blackberry seems to have nearly run its course in many districts.

E. W. KIRKPATRICK.

The newly elected president of the American Association of Nurserymen was born in Jefferson county, Tenn., in 1844. In 1856 his parents removed to Texas. In the large family of children there were only two boys, and it was the lot of the elder, the subject of this sketch, when still young to be the aid of his widowed mother. In 1874 Mr. Kirkpatrick established a nursery at McKinney, Texas, and the business prospered. He has taken much interest in horticultural subjects of all kinds, and has ever been eager to learn new ideas and to give assistance and encouragement to everyone in that line. The Texas Nursery Co., of

E. W. Kirkpatrick.
President Am. Association of Nurserymen.

Sherman, is the outgrowth of the former nursery. Mr. Kirkpatrick has for years been a regular attendant at the conventions of the national society and his election as its head is a merited recognition of his efforts in its behalf.

EVERGREEN SEEDLINGS.

C. H. Joosten recently protested against the assessment of duty on an importation of evergreen seedlings entered at the port of New York. The seedlings of various evergreen trees were classified under the provision in paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897, for "evergreen seedlings," and were claimed to be dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "stocks, cuttings and seedlings of all fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen, not specially provided for." The board of general appraisers overruled the protest.

ALL nursery stock exported to Australia will be fumigated on its arrival there.

THE Revue Horticole announces the death, on May 5 last, of the distinguished French horticulturist, Felix Sahut. He was one of the first to discover, in association with Planchon, the phylloxera on the roots of the grape vine in the neighborhood of Montpelier, France. He was also one of the most active in advocating and practicing the introduction of American resistant vines on which to graft the wine-producing varieties.

GREENWOOD, IND.—J. O. Bishop says that business was very good this spring. He has already put up a new house for carnations and expects to put up still more glass this summer.

FRANKFORT, IND.—H. M. Humfield has a banana tree which has ripened a bunch containing thiry-five fruits, which he is selling at 25 cents apiece to those who have a desire to partake of home grown fruit.

MOLINE, ILL.—The Tri-City Florists' Club met with Wm. Knees June 16 and decided to hold a picnic for members and families in July, probably at Campbell's island. T. Ewoldt, of Davenport, furnished a strawberry treat from his beds. J. T. Temple, of Davenport, brought over a basket of many varieties of peonies and they were examined closely, for the members believe that this is one of the coming flowers of the day.

PACIFIC COAST.

Elmhurst, Cal.—Paul W. A. Grallert is preparing to put up two carnation houses 22x100 using King's roof construction. He will also put up three asparagus houses 15x100 with old material. These are not "the largest houses on the coast," as a local newspaper recently stated.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—Thos. Thompson has had a two weeks' siege with malaria but is now convalescent. He has about 400 plants of Richardia Elliottiana that he has raised from seed. They are growing vigorously, planted out of doors and the "bed of yellow callas" is quite an attraction. Geo. Butler & Son have secured a good piece of land near the Odd Fellows' cemetery upon which they will soon erect two houses 20x150 each and later add numerous other houses. The new range will be managed by Geo. Butler and the old plant will be cared for by the son, but flowers will be abandoned and both ranges will be devoted to cucumbers.

SEA WATER.

Our water supply is inadequate and, as we are located near a tidewater river, I have been trying to demonstrate whether the salt water would be injurious to grass and hardy plants. So far I have seen no ill effects but you will confer a favor by stating what proportion of salt such plants will stand. Napa.

The ordinary varieties of hardy plants and grasses do not need any salt fertilizing although a small quantity occasionally does not seem to injure them. In ordinary salt water the percentage of salt is about twenty pounds to the hundred gallons of water. It is, of course, out of the question to use water of this description regularly and it must be that the correspondent takes his water from the river at a higher point than where the salt from the bay impregnates the fresh water that flows down the river and if no ill effects have resulted from the use of the water it is because there is not a superabundance of salt in it. He is therefore perfectly safe in continuing to use it freely.

There are many varieties of salt and marsh grasses that thrive only where they receive frequent bathings in sea water but they are not used usually in gardens and their scope is confined entirely to waste and boggy places.

Rock salt as a fertilizer is used extensively on the Pacific coast for various kinds of vegetables and especially asparagus. G.

LOS ANGELES.

Trade and Market.

The summer is now on in full blast and it is beginning to have its effect upon the flowers. The florists are having great difficulty in obtaining enough decent stock to fill their stores or orders.

Business has been very good, owing to the numerous June weddings and graduation exercises and the demand for flowers for the past week has far exceeded the supply. The prices are low, but are high enough for the quality of the flowers.

This condition is not surprising to the dealers, as they have this same trouble to contend with every summer. However, it came on about a month earlier this season than usual and has been a great drawback to the June trade. It is very hard to explain to the average customer the reason for not having better flowers, for as a rule they fail to realize that plants need a rest in California as well as in the east.

Carnations, the most popular and all around useful flower, are the ones that are missed the most, but it will not be long, about three or four weeks, I think, before they will be in again in sufficient quantities to supply the summer demand, and I have every reason to believe that the quality will be much better and the price more steady.

The month of May was a record-breaker in the output of carnations, and it is believed that for the first time in the history of Los Angeles, carnations were used as the general decorating flower on Memorial day. The supply was enormous and the price low enough to be within reach of all. Ever since May 23 carnations have been selling at 25 cents per hundred, wholesale, and for Memorial day purposes they retailed at from 20 to 25 cents per bunch of fifty.

Roses are scarce and the quality poor. Sprengeri and plumosus in strings are plentiful, but plumosus sprays are hard to get. Centaurea is quite plentiful and has been resorted to by the florists, in absence of better flowers, for foundations of floral designs. They are now wholesaling for 50 cents per hundred.

Sweet peas are bringing from $1 to $1.50 per thousand and the supply is holding out quite well, although they are beginning to get scarce now.

Various Notes.

D. R. Woods, of Wilmington, has purchased a half interest in the nursery of the Ingleside Floral Co., located at the corner of Adams and Main streets.

E. R. Meserve is making some extensive additions to his lath houses and expects to fill them with plumosus and smilax.

Morris Goldensen is contemplating a trip east in the near future and will visit the World's Fair before his return.

E. J. Vawter, president of the Ocean Park Floral Co., informs me that the carnation output of the gardens at Ocean Park for the week prior to May 30 amounted to over 250,000 blooms and that the fields have recently been extended several acres. He is also enlarging his propagating house to a considerable extent. R. B. H.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business has reached the stagnation stage. A very few weddings are still on tapis, but the schools are all closed and everyone with money to spend has gone to the country, so the florists are having a quiet time. Funerals are out of fashion also. Flowers, except good roses, are not plentiful although we probably have enough to supply the small demand. We have had very cool weather for the past two weeks, so that stock does not exhibit that washed out appearance that we were getting used to during the recent warm spell. Carnations, except such varieties as Joost, Scott and Portia, are not over-plentiful and still bring about $2 per hundred. The varieties I have just mentioned can be had at from 75 cents to $1 per hundred. The street peddlers take advantage of these low prices and one sees on the sidewalks great quantities of indoor red and pink sorts with fair blooms and good stems. Great quantities of outdoor Gen. Jacqueminot roses are being used to fill up the windows. Valley and lilies are in fair supply.

Various Notes.

Alexander Craw, state quarantine officer against insect pests, has accepted the similar position offered him by the government of Hawaii at a salary of $5,000 a year. The deal was closed by cable. His good work in the quarantine department of the state horticultural commission has been seconded ably by his assistant E. K. Carnes. G.

DORCHESTER, MASS.

There were no more sincere mourners on account of the untimely death of L. H. Foster than his faithful assistants, Daniel E. Sullivan and Philip J. McGrath. Mr. Sullivan's loyalty covered a period of twenty-four years and Mr. McGrath has spent the last eleven years in Mr. Foster's service. Mr. Sullivan says he believes there are few men in the profession who could think as much of their employes as Mr. Foster. As a practical evidence of his appreciation Mr. Foster, in his will, left all his real estate and personal property on King street, Dorchester, including the land and greenhouses and the personal property at the greenhouses on Wrentham street, to Messrs. Sullivan and McGrath and on the settlement of the estate they will assume full possession of the same. In the meantime the business will be continued in behalf of Miss Edith Foster. The best wishes and good will of the trade in and around Boston are extended to these gentlemen and sincere congratulations on their good fortune and the reward that has demonstrated the value of honorable and loyal devotion to the interests of one's employer. J. Austin Shaw.

ANTS.

A subscriber inquires as to the best way of destroying these troublesome little creatures. If it is indoors there are several poisons that will destroy them, but if it is on the lawn and they are throwing up their hills it is hard to kill them without killing the grass. For use under glass here are two prescriptions, both poison, and should be used with caution:

Boil one ounce of ordinary arsenic in one quart water till it is reduced to one pint, then add one-half pound coarse sugar. This mixture can be dropped about the run and nests. The ants will sample it and retire to the happy hunting grounds.

Mix together one part of calomel and ten parts of pulverized white sugar and lay around their haunts. The ants will taste it and wish they hadn't.

I have consulted the superintendent of a large and beautiful cemetery who has been fighting ant hills for years and he says, after trying several receipts, he finds the only effectual plan is to scald the hills, then remove the sod and a few inches of earth and again give another application of boiling water to make sure there are no ants or eggs left alive, and then renew with fresh sod.

DORCHESTER, MASS.

There were no more sincere mourners on account of the untimely death of L. E. Foster than his faithful assistants, Daniel E. Sullivan and Philip J. McGrath. Mr. Sullivan's loyalty covered a period of twenty four years and Mr. McGrath has spent the last eleven years in Mr. Foster's service. Mr. Sullivan says he believes there are few men in the profession who could think as much of their employes as Mr. Foster. As a practical evidence of his appreciation Mr. Foster, in his will, left all his real estate and personal property on King street, Dorchester, including the land and greenhouses and the personal property at the greenhouses on Wrentham street, to Messrs. Sullivan and McGrath and on the settlement of the estate they will assume full possession of the same. In the meantime the business will be continued in behalf of Miss Edith Foster. The best wishes and good will of the trade in and around Boston are extended to these gentlemen and sincere congratulations on their good fortune and the reward that has demonstrated the value of honorable and loyal devotion to the interests of one's employer.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ANTS.

A subscriber inquires as to the best way of destroying these troublesome little creatures. If it is indoors there are several poisons that will destroy them, but if it is on the lawn and they are throwing up their hills it is hard to kill them without killing the grass. For use under glass here are two prescriptions, both poison, and should be used with caution:

Boil one ounce of ordinary arsenic in one quart water till it is reduced to one pint, then add one half pound coarse sugar. This mixture can be dropped about the nest and nests. The ants will sample it and retire to the happy hunting grounds.

Mix together one part of calomel and ten parts of pulverized white sugar and lay around their haunts. The ants will taste it and wish they hadn't.

I have consulted the superintendent of a large and beautiful cemetery who has been fighting ant hills for years and he says, after trying several receipts, he finds the only effectual plan is to scald the hills, then remove the sod and a few inches of earth and again give another application of boiling water to make sure there are no ants or eggs left alive, and then renew with fresh sod.

HOUSE FOR GREENS.

Does Asparagus plumosus require the full sun to do its best? I want to build a house for asparagus and smilax and all the place I have is on the north side of a building, where it would have the sun only about half the day.

W. E. H.

Asparagus plumosus requires plenty of light, though not full exposure to the sun during the summer months, it being necessary to apply a light shading to the glass in the early summer and to continue this until about October 1 in an ordinary season. It is probable that you may grow smilax and asparagus fairly well in a north house, though it would not be as much under control during the winter season as though it were planted in a house with a more favorable exposure. A night temperature of 65 degrees is the best for the asparagus, but the smilax will do well in a slightly lower temperature.

W. H. TAPLIN.

KANSAS CITY.

Trade no better than last week. The writer dropped down to Independence, Mo., last Thursday afternoon. Florists and their places all looked very prosperous. Took a look through the Walnut Hill greenhouses and met the proprietor, E. G. Bunyar, who is more than pleased with this spring's business. He says he has done more this year than ever. He is not going to do any building, only some repairing.

Miss M. Dalley, one of our lady florists, left last Saturday and sailed the following Wednesday for Europe, to be gone three months on a pleasure trip to her old home in England.

Our little florist, Charlie Laundy, of Westport, took unto himself a wife last Wednesday, and we all wish him happiness.

Mrs. Lydia Augar, the lady florist, of Fort Wayne, Ind., stopped off here last Wednesday on her way to Coffeyville, Kan.

L. M. S.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—A. C. Brown will abandon the old site of his greenhouses, platting the property into building lots.

STRATHAM, N. H.—A. H. Craig & Son will increase their glass area this year about 5,000 square feet. They intend to do something in the wholesale plant line and also to handle nursery stock.

W. W. RAWSON & CO., 12 Faneuil Hall Square.

E. H. HUNT, Chicago, Ill. BOSTON, MASS., June 16, 1904.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter just received. We have used the To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper in our own greenhouses and find it a superior article and very satisfactory. It does the work very effectively without injuring the plants. Yours very respectfully, [Signed] W. W. RAWSON & CO.

One box (12 rolls) 60c. One case (144 rolls) $6.50.

Send for a free copy of our "WORDS OF WISDOM," by Leading Growers, and enclose 11c in stamps for a FREE TRIAL BOX OF TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING PAPER, this is sufficient quantity to make two thorough fumigations in a house 100x24 feet.

Measure the sheets. To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper sheets measure full 36 inches long. They are longer and contain 25 PER CENT MORE NICOTINE than any other similar product.

NITRATE OF SODA.

It is scarcely necessary to say that this is a most useful stimulant, and of all artificial manures none gives quicker results or needs using with more care and discretion. Much damage is often done by those using it without a proper knowledge of its nature and effects. An ounce to the square yard is 250 pounds to the acre, and this is the utmost that should ever be applied at one time, and it would be better to give only half an ounce, and repeat the dressing a fortnight later. It is a very soluble manure, and hence of quick action, though, on the other hand, it is soon washed down into the subsoil, out of the reach of the roots. Its effect is seen in the dark green color of the foliage, and this increased vigor is communicated to the roots, thus enabling them to lay hold of the more or less insoluble plant food of the soil with greater power, and to dissolve it by the action of the root-sap.

Farmers say nitrate of soda is an exhausting manure, and doubtless it is, by virtue of its increasing the power of the plant to absorb the plant food in the soil. Of course, it is only a partial manure, but provided a good supply of phosphate is applied also, and there is a fair amount of potash in the soil, as there usually is in any repeatedly manured ground, there need be no fear of exhausting the soil, while very good results will be obtained by its judicious use.

Nitrate of soda is often very lumpy, and it should always be broken up before using, so that there are no lumps bigger than peas. It has the effect of lowering the temperature of water, and therefore, of the soil containing it. Anyone can prove this for himself by dissolving some in a pail of water. When used as a liquid manure half an ounce to the gallon of water is sufficiently strong, and if the soil is very dry it would be best to give some plain water first, or some of the tender rootlets may be damaged. In scattering nitrate on the soil care should be taken that it does not rest on the leaves of plants in active growth, as it will injure them if it does.

Care is especially necessary in applying nitrate to fruit trees. It should never be given them unless they are carrying heavy crops of fruit, or it will induce rankness of growth at the expense of fruitfulness. It should not be given to them after July in any circumstances, as it will cause a late summer growth, which never becomes properly ripened, and is, therefore, not fruitful. Some fruit growers give a small dressing of nitrate just before the trees blossom, to aid in setting the fruit—a rather critical time in cold springs. Tomatoes should not receive nitrate until two trusses of blossom have set their fruit, or it will induce too much growth. Afterwards it causes the fruit to swell very rapidly. The carrying of the fruit insures a well-balanced growth. With vegetables, where we want vigorous growth and cannot well have too much of it, the case is different. With all the cabbage family good returns follow the use of nitrate, half a pound to the twenty square yards being applied every two or three weeks during the growing season until August when we want the growth to harden. Beets, onions, carrots, and parsnips should have a dressing twice during the season at the same rate, early in June, and again in July. It is as well to lightly hoe it in. Peas and beans do not need nitrate. Asparagus profits by a dressing of nitrate, not only during the cutting season, but during the summer, too, when it is storing up plant food in the roots for the growths of the following spring. The same with rhubarb.

With flowers a good deal of discretion is necessary in the use of nitrate, as in some we prize vigorous foliage, and in others we want as much bloom as possible, and do not mind how little foliage there may be, while if there is much rank foliage we do not secure so much blossom, as, for instance, with geraniums. Most annuals are more or less greedy feeders, and will profit by having a little nitrate lightly worked in the soil among them, and watered in. If they have a sufficiently well-cultivated soil to give them a good root run, they make a splendid response to it, but if the worked soil is shallow, as it often is among perennial plants, and the plants have not been properly spaced out, it only increases their weakness and untidy tangle.—Alger Petts in the Gardeners' Chronicle.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

Following is a list of the prize winners at the June show of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society, which was held June 14.

Vase of hybrid perpetual roses, not to exceed fifty blooms, Gen. Howard Carrol's prize, $25, won by David MacFarlane, Scarborough.

Collection of flowers cut from hardy perennials, Mrs. H. Draper's prize, $20, won by D. MacFarlane.

Collection outdoor roses, E. Buckhout's prize, ice pitcher, won by H. Nicholls.

Six varieties outdoor roses, six of each, C. H. Curtis' prize, silver butter dish, won by A. Grierson, gardener for H. Arnold, Portchester.

Three varieties outdoor roses, six of each, A. Bourn's prize, pipe, won by Jas. Ballantyne, gardener for Mrs. Geo. Lewis, Tarrytown.

Twelve outdoor roses, any one variety, Russell Lawrie's prize, cigar case, won by H. Nicholls.

Vase roses, W. F. McCord's prize, military brushes, won by A. Wissenberger, gardener for H. Willetts, White Plains.

Display of outdoor climbing roses, J. S. Lockett's prize, fountain pen, won by A. Grierson.

Antirrhinum, Geo. Vare's prize, box of cigars, won by Jas. Ballantyne.

Collection of flowers cut from hardy shrubs, A. P. Husted's prize, umbrella, won by Jas. Ballantyne.

Collection sweet peas, B. Huston's prize, box of cigars, won by Jas. Ballantyne.

Several special exhibits awarded certificates of merits were those of F. S. Pammer and the F. R. Pierson Co., among which was the new fern, which is a very great improvement on Nephrolepis Piersoni.

Second prizes were awarded to Mr. Grierson for display of perennials and for collection of roses.

There were several fine exhibits of vegetables, strawberries, etc.

This was the best June exhibition this society has ever given and much credit is due to F. S. Pammer for the very able management of the show.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a house 11x100 feet, seven feet six inches to the ridge, even span, sash bars six feet eight inches long. There are about 1,600 square feet of glass, one side being boarded and the other having twenty-six inches glass. Will a Florida, Jr., boiler No. 502 with seventeen inches grate be large enough to heat this to 50 degrees when it is 10 degrees below zero outside? N. W.

Your house requires 400 feet of radiation, to heat which it will take a boiler with at least fifty square feet of heating surface, i. e., surface in the boiler exposed to heated gases. I do not have the rating of the Florida, Jr., boiler No. 502, with seventeen inches grate. The manufacturers, however, can give you these figures. The piping for your house should be so arranged as to give the boiler sufficient radiation to heat the house without working to its full capacity. If you use 2-inch pipe seven runs of pipe with the water at 180 degrees will give you ample heat, provided the pipe is properly arranged. L. C. C.

What had one ought to charge for wintering palms three feet high in 7-inch pots insuring against accidents, and returning them to the owners in the spring? W. E. H.

The cost of boarding plants for the winter depends upon various circumstances, the most equitable method being to base a charge upon so much per square foot of space occupied, but if they are to be insured in all respects it would be safer to charge from twenty-five to fifty per cent of the value of the plant and to establish a minimum charge of say 50 cents for an average plant of the size specified. It is difficult to establish a rule in this matter, for much depends upon the class of customers one has to deal with, but unless a fair charge is made the boarding business is an unprofitable one.
